Putradarçana ("the seeing of the sons"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 355 (i.e. Putradarçanaparvan).

[Putradarçanaparvan] ("the section relating to the seeing of the sons," the 96th of the minor parvas of Mhbhṛ.; cf. Putradarçana). § 789: Janamejaya said: Tell me what that wonderful feat was which M.-r. Vyāsa accomplished after his promise to Dhṛtarāṣṭra when he had taken up his abode in the forest with Gandhārī and Kuntī, and after Vidura had left his body and entered into Yudhisṭhira, and when all the Pāṇḍavas were in the ascetic retreat; for how many days did Yudhisṭhira stay with his men in the woods; on what food did the Pāṇḍavas support themselves with their men and wives? Vaiçampāyana said: The Pāṇḍavas passed about a month in that forest, supporting themselves on diverse kinds of food and drink. Then Vyāsa came there and Nārada, etc. (a); they sat down on sacred seats [of kuça grass] and on seats of peacock feathers; Gandhārī, etc. (β) also sat down; they spoke of R., D., and As. Then Vyāsa said that he knew that burning grief in the heart of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (γ); "let D., G., and M.-r. to-day behold the energy of my penances; therefore tell me what wish of thine I shall grant to-day." Dhṛtarāṣṭra wished to see his dead children and kinsmen, mentioning Duryodhana and the slaughter of Bhisma and Droṇa. Hearing this the grief of Gandhārī, etc. (δ) became fresh; Gandhārī said that for sixteen years Dhṛtarāṣṭra never had slept for grief; and also Kṛṣṇa, etc. (e) grieved exceedingly. Vyāsa then asked Kuntī to tell what she wished (XV, 29). Kuntī told the story of Karṇa's birth (mentioning Durvāsa, etc.); Vyāsa promised to show her

Karna, and said that she had no fault in what had happened about the birth of Karna; "the gods beget after five methods (thought, word, sight, touch, and sexual union)" (XV, 30). Vyasa promised to show everyone the persons whom they wished to see and who were in the other world (†); "they were all portions of D.; both G., Aps., Pç., Gh., Rā., *Punyajana*h, Si., D.-r., D., and Dā. met with death on the battlefield of Kurukshetra"; he explained who among the dead, etc., was what: Dhrtarashtra was the Gandharva king Dhrtarashtra, etc. (η). They all, Dhrtarashtra with his ministers and the Pandavas and R. and G., proceeded towards the Bhāgirathi and waited for the advent of night; at sunset they bathed and finished their evening rites (XV, 31). When night came, Vyasa plunged into the Bhāgirathi for a bath, and summoned all the deceased warriors, who all rose up from the water with a loud uproar, everyone presenting the same aspect that he did when clad for battle; there were Bhisma, etc. (θ); all of them were now robed in celestial vestments and had brilliant earrings; they were free from all animosity, etc.; G. sang their praises, etc.; each of them was waited upon by bands of Aps. Vyasa gave Dhrtarashtra celestial vision; endued with celestial knowledge, Gandhari saw all the slain; Dhrtarashtra became full of joy (XV, 32). Divested of wrath and malice, the spirits of the dead mingled with the living in happy converse (ι). Having sported with one another for that night they, taking leave from each other, returned to the places they had come from (κ), Vyasa dismissing them within the twinkling of an eye; of Rā. and Pç. some proceeded to the Uttarakurus, others to the gods. With Vyasa's permission, many widows plunged into the waters of the Bhāgirathi in order to accompany their deceased lords, and proceeded to those regions where their husbands had found their abodes. Vyasa granted to all the men there assembled the fruition of their wishes. People of diverse realms, hearing of this meeting between the dead and living, became highly delighted (XV, 33).—§ 790: Sauti said: Janamejaya filled with joy asked Vaiçampāyana, how it is possible for persons whose bodies have been destroyed to reappear in those very forms. Vaiçampāyana said: Acts are never destroyed; bodies are born of acts; so also are features, etc., quoting a ṛuti in the horse-sacrifice (XV, 34). Dhrtarashtra had never beheld his own sons, but got spiritual vision from Vyasa, he had learnt all the royal duties, as also the Vedas and Upanishads; Vidura attained to high success through penances. Janamejaya said: If Vyasa shows me my father as he was when he died I may then believe all that thou hast told me. Sauti said: Then Vyasa brought Parikshit [from the other world], and Çamika and his son Çrṅgin; all the counsellors and ministers of the king beheld them. Janamejaya, performing the final bath in his sacrifice, highly rejoiced; he poured the sacred water over his father, as also over himself; then he said to Āstika that this his sacrifice was fraught with many wonderful incidents; Āstika praised Vyasa and the snake-sacrifice, from which Takshaka had with difficulty escaped, the worship of R., etc. Janamejaya honoured Āstika, and then asked R. Vaiçampāyana about Dhrtarashtra's further residence in the woods (XV, 35).—§ 791: Janamejaya said: Having seen his sons, etc., what did Dhrtarashtra, and king Yudhishtira also, do? Vaiçampāyana said: Beholding that wonderful sight, the reappearance of his children, R.-r. Dhrtarashtra became relieved of his grief and returned to his retreat; the people and R., dismissed by Dhrtarashtra, returned home. Vyasa came and asked Dhrtarashtra to dismiss the Pandavas ("thou hast heard discourses from R., the mysteries of D. from Nārada, etc."), who now had passed more than a month in the woods. Dhrtarashtra addressed Yudhishtira affectionately, and dismissed him and his brothers. Yudhishtira offered to wait upon his uncle and his two mothers; Gandhari dissuaded him from that step. Yudhishtira said that his mind was wholly set upon penances, as the whole earth were empty now, etc. (α) Sahadeva, saying that he dared not leave his mother, urged Yudhishtira to return to the capital; he would himself remain, engaged in penances and in serving the old king and his mothers. Kunti affectionately dissuaded her sons from remaining with her and thereby obstructing her penances. They then took leave of their mother and Dhrtarashtra, who blessed and comforted Yudhishtira, etc. (β), and embraced them one after another. Then Gandhari blessed them, and Kunti kissed them on their heads, etc. Gandhari and Kunti embraced Draupadi, etc., and instructed them. Yudhishtira with his wives and troops and kinsmen set out for Hastinapura (XV, 36).

Rājadharmānuṣāṇa = Nāḍījaṅgha: XII, 6337, (6340), 6342, (6343), 6396 (kṛṣṇagottamaḥ), 6407 (do.), 6412, 6414, 6416, 6417, 6421, 6433, 6436, 6440, 6443. Cf. Dharmarāj.

Rājadharmānuṣāṇa ("the teaching of the duties of kings"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 351 (i.e. Rājadharmānuṣāsanaparvan).

[Rājadharmānuṣāsanaparvan(°va)] ("the section containing the teaching of the duties of kings," the 88th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Rājadharmānuṣāsaṇa). § 621: After the completion of the water rites by the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (a), many Brahmarshis, etc. (β), came to Yudhishtira. Nārada congratulated Yudhishtira upon his success. Yudhishtira lamented the loss of his kinsmen (γ); Yudhishtira at the match of dice had wondered seeing that Karna's feet resembled the feet of Kunti; he inquired of Nārada, why the earth had swallowed up the wheels of Karna's chariot (XII, 1). Nārada recited to Yudhishtira the story of Karna's pupilage with Drona and Rāma (among G., Rā, Y., and D.) and the curse called down upon him by a brahman whose cow Karna had inadvertently slain (δ) (XII, 2); then the story of Karna's extraordinary powers of endurance, in consequence of which his real caste became known to Rāma (who had taught him the Brahma weapon), who thereupon cursed him for his deceit; the worm Alarka was an Aśura named Danṇa, who in the Kṛta age had ravished the spouse of Bhṛgu and been cursed by him, until he should be liberated by Paraśu-Rāma. Karna, arriving before Duryodhana, told him: "I have mastered every weapon" (XII, 3). Nārada said: "To a self-choice at Rājapura, the capital of the Kāliṅga king Citrāṅgada Duryodhana (with Karna), Çiçupāla, etc. (ε), repaired; the maiden (who was accompanied by her nurse and a guard of eunuchs) passed by Duryodhana, who then (relying upon Bhīshma and Drona) took her up on his chariot and abducted her by force. Karna, riding on his chariot, proceeded in Duryodhana's rear. The kings pursued Karna and Duryodhana; but Karna made them all turn away, and Duryodhana reached Hastinapura with the maiden" (XII, 4). Nārada said: "The Māgadha king Jarāsandha challenged Karna to a single combat; at last they fought with bare arms, and Karna was about to sever the two portions of Jarāsandha's body that had been united together by Jarā; then Jarāsandha gave up all desire of hostility and gave unto Karna the town Mālinī (i.e. Campā). From that time he ruled over Campā and the Āṅgas agreeably to the wishes of Duryodhana." Allusions to XII, 2, 3, etc. (ζ) (XII, 5). D.-r. Nārada became silent; Yudhishtira grieved; Kunti comforted Yudhishtira by telling him that neither she nor Sūrya could dissuade Karna from fighting the Pāṇḍavas (XII, 6). Yudhishtira's lament (η) before Arjuna; he wished to renounce the sovereignty (XII, 7). Arjuna addressed Yudhishtira, justifying war and approving of the acquisition of wealth, quoting Nahyasa (who cried fie on the state of poverty, in which he had done many wicked acts, and which is for recluses and R.), and citing the conduct of the gods and Dā., which is sanctioned by the Vedas; "this earth formerly belonged to king Dilīpa, etc. (θ); she now belongs to thee; a great sacrifice awaits thee; if thou dost not perform this sacrifice, the sins of this kingdom shall all be thine; those subjects whose king performs a horse-sacrifice . . . all become pure," as shown by the example of Mahādeva (Çiva (δ)); "this is the great path called Daçaratha (affording place for ten waggons, i.e. the sacrifice [Nil.])" (XII, 8). Unmoved by Arjuna's words, Yudhishtira desired to lead the life of a religious recluse (XII, 9). Bhīma's address to Yudhishtira commending sovereignty (XII, 10).—§ 622: Arjuna recited the story of the discourse between Çakra (in the shape of a golden bird) and certain youths (R.) desirous of leading a forest life (XII, 11).—§ 623: Nakula addressed Yudhishtira, blaming renunciation and commending the life of a householder (XII, 12). Sahadeva recommended to Yudhishtira a life of action with the soul free from attachments (XII, 13). Draupadi reminded Yudhishtira of his former counsels (a) (XII, 14). Arjuna praised him who wields the rod of chastisement; "Indra, by the slaughter of Vṛtra, became the great Indra; those among the gods that are given to slaughtering others are adored much more by men; Rudra, etc. (β) are all slaughterers; all people bend to these gods, but not to Brahmān or Dhātṛ or Pāṣaṇ at any time, except a few men of noble disposition" (XII, 15). Bhīma's second address to Yudhishtira (γ), urging him to subdue his grief (XII, 16). Yudhishtira exposed the folly of earthly enjoyments quoting Janaka (observant of the religion of moksha): "my treasures are immense; yet I possess nothing; if again the whole of Mithilā were burnt, nothing of mine will be burnt" (XII, 17).—§ 624: Arjuna recited the story of the discourse between the Videha king Janaka (who had shaved his head) and his queen (the princess of Koçala), in which the latter explained the claims of a life of poverty and renunciation (XII, 18).—§ 625: Yudhishtira's reply to Arjuna on the vanity of wealth (XII, 19).—§ 626: Devasthāna pointed out to Yudhishtira that the period had not come when he could retire into the woods (a) (XII, 20), and recommended the assumption of sovereignty with his soul freed from attachment, quoting a discourse which Brhaspati delivered to Indra; the R., etc., adopt the religion of Exertion (not Emancipation), and attain to heaven through their acts (XII, 21).—§ 627: Arjuna justified before Yudhishtira the slaughter of foes in battle: "Indra, himself, though a brahman, became a kshatriya in his acts, and battled with his sinful kinsfolk 810 times" (XII, 22).—§ 628: Vyāsa dissuaded Yudhishtira from a life of retirement and commended a life of domesticity, quoting a verse of Brhaspati ("like a snake devouring mice, the Earth devours a king that is inclined to peace and a brahman that is exceedingly attached to domesticity"), and reciting the story of R.-r. Sudyumna: the brothers Çaṅkha and Likhita dwelled in two separate dwellings on the banks of Bāhuddā; once, when Çaṅkha had gone out, Likhita came to his asylum and ate many ripe fruits. Çaṅkha told him to confess to the king and ask him to inflict on him the punishment of a thief. King Sudyumna would pardon him; but Likhita would not; Sudyumna then caused his hands to be cut off; Likhita, having asked pardon of Çaṅkha, was told by him to gratify D., R., and P. at Bāhuddā, upon which two hands grew out. Çaṅkha said that he was not his chastiser, "but the king has been himself purified, as also thyself, along with P." That king became eminent by this act and obtained the highest success (XII, 23). Vyāsa exhorted Yudhishtira to grant the wishes of his brothers, perform sacrifices, and imitate the great monarchs of old, especially Hayagrīva (b) (XII, 24).—§ 629: Hearing the words of Vyāsa and seeing Arjuna angry, Yudhishtira declared to Vyāsa that earthly rule could give him no delight. Vyāsa answered, pointing out the virtues of Time, quoting "the old story recited by king Senajit in grief". "Engaging in battle has been said to be the sacrifice for a king; a due observance of the science of chastisement is his yoga; and the gift of wealth in sacrifices in the shape of dakṣiṇā is his renunciation; all this should be regarded as acts that sanctify him" (XII, 25).—§ 630: Yudhishtira's reply to Arjuna recommending a life of yoga and austerities;

this is the practice of R., regarded by D. as brāhmaṇas; this is the opinion of the Vaiśvānāsas; the Ajāh, etc. (a) have all gone to heaven by means of Vedic study; by performing the acts indicated in the Vedas, battle, sacrifices, study of the Vedas, restraintment of passion, one goes to heaven by the southern path of the Sun; the northern path is travelled by those devoted to yoga, and is much applauded by those conversant with the Purāṇas; "one acquires heaven through contentment," citing the discourse of Yayāti of old (XII, 26). Yudhiṣṭhira censured himself for his cupidity and for the slaughter he caused of his kinsmen (β); Bhīṣma had, by the energy of his weapons, burnt Ugrāyudha, etc.; Vyāsa comforted Yudhiṣṭhira by explaining the action of Destiny, and exhorted him to work (XII, 27).—§ 631: Vyāsa recited "the old story, that is known by the name of Aśman's discourse": the Vidisha king Janaka, filled with sorrow, questioned the wise brahman Aśman as to how a man should behave upon occasions of the accession and the destruction of both kinsmen and wealth. Aśman said that Destiny and Time are inevitable; "no person can see either heaven or hell; the scriptures, however, are the eyes of the virtuous; frame thy conduct according to the scriptures." Janaka became freed from grief; "enjoy the earth, O son of Kuntī!" (XII, 28).—§ 632: Arjuna asked Kṛṣṇa (who from his earliest years was dearer to Yudhiṣṭhira than even Arjuna himself) to dispel Yudhiṣṭhira's grief. Kṛṣṇa asked Yudhiṣṭhira not to grieve for men who died heroically in battle in the observance of kṣatriya duties, quoting the Shoḍaśarājopākhyāna (δ), i.e. the old discourse of Nārada before Srījaya when the latter was deeply afflicted with grief on account of the death of his son. Srījaya was freed from grief, and Nārada gave back to him his son Surarṇaśthuvīn, whom Parvata had given him, and who had been bereft of life; that child should live 1,000 years (XII, 29).—§ 633: Requested by Yudhiṣṭhira, Kṛṣṇa told Nārada-Parvatopākhyāna (δ) (XII, 30).—§ 634: Thereafter Nārada told Suvarṇaśthivī-sambhavopākhyāna (δ) (XII, 31).—§ 635: Vyāsa exhorted Yudhiṣṭhira to shake off his grief and assume the reins of sovereignty. Yudhiṣṭhira feared that the guilt of slaughter had stained him; Vyāsa repeated his observations on Destiny (XII, 32); as Yudhiṣṭhira still was remorseful (a), Vyāsa repeated his observations on Time, and pointed to expiatory rites, illustrating the case by the war of 32,000 years, by which the gods, having slain Dai, gained possession of heaven, and slew 88,000 brahmanas called Çālāṅkāh who had joined the Dā; "thou hast only followed the path formerly trodden by the very gods; men like you never go to hell." He recommended a horse-sacrifice as an expiation, mentioning that Indra, assisted by the Maruts, gradually performed 100 sacrifices and became Çatakratu, and is adored in the heavens by Aps., R., and D. (XII, 33). Vyāsa discoursed on expiation and indicated the acts for which there should be expiation, citing the sage Uddālaka, who caused his son Çetaketu to be begotten by a disciple, etc. (XII, 34), and declared that by penances, religious rites, and gifts one may wash off sins if one does not commit them anew, and indicated diverse kinds of expiation for diverse kinds of sins (XII, 35). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Vyāsa declared what food is clean and what is unclean (XII, 36). Yudhiṣṭhira desired to hear of the duties of kings and of the four different orders. Vyāsa, casting his eyes on Nārada, directed Yudhiṣṭhira to apply to Bhīṣma for discourses on kingly duties, as Bhīṣma, having gratified D.-r. with Bṛh. at their head, had acquired a knowledge of the duties of kings, and of that science, with its interpretations, that Uçanas and Bṛhaspati know; and a knowledge of all the Vedas with their branches, from Vasiṣṭha and Cyavana of Bhṛgu's race; in olden days he studied under Sanatkumāra (the eldest-born son of Brahman); he learned the duties of the Yatis from Mārkaṇḍeya; and obtained all weapons from Rāma and Indra; although childless, yet he has many regions of bliss before himself; B.-r. were always his courtiers. Yudhiṣṭhira was ashamed to approach Bhīṣma. Kṛṣṇa exhorted Yudhiṣṭhira to rise up, shaking off his grief (β). Thus addressed by Kṛṣṇa, etc. (γ), Yudhiṣṭhira gave up his grief and anxiety, and with his brothers and the other kings, headed by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, set out for Hastinapura. The procession described (δ) (XII, 37). The citizens welcomed Yudhiṣṭhira and Draupadī, etc. (e). Yudhiṣṭhira entered the palace with Dhaumya and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and was blessed by the brahmanas, but cursed by Cārvaṇa, a Rā. who had disguised himself as a brahman, and a friend of Duryodhana; the brahmanas killed Cārvaṇa by uttering the mere sound hum (XII, 38).—§ 636: Kṛṣṇa related: In the Kṛta age Rā. Cārvaṇa performed penances in Badarī; at last he solicited from Brahman the boon of immunity from fear at the hands of every being in the universe, which Brahman granted him, only with the limitation that he should be careful not to offend brahmanas. Then he began to cause trouble to the gods; Brahman predicted Cārvaṇa's friendship with Duryodhana, and that he would insult the brahmanas (XII, 39).—§ 637: The ceremony of Yudhiṣṭhira's installation on the throne described (a); he made gifts to the brahmanas, who all blessed him and his brothers (XII, 40). Yudhiṣṭhira answered and enjoined respect for his aged uncle, disposed of the high appointments of state (β) (XII, 41), and caused the obsequial rites (çrāddha) to be performed in honour of the slaughtered heroes (γ), and performed acts of kindness to the ladies, widowed in the battle, the destitute, the blind, and helpless (XII, 42). Then he adored Kṛṣṇa (XII, 43), and assigned to his brothers proper residences from among the palaces of the Kuru princes slain in battle (δ). They passed a happy night in their respective abodes, and in the morning presented themselves before king Yudhiṣṭhira (XII, 44). Yudhiṣṭhira's gifts to diverse persons (e). Then he addressed Kṛṣṇa (with the Kaustubha), whom he found rapt in meditation (XII, 45); he uttered a hymn to Kṛṣṇa, who awoke and praised Bhīṣma (ζ), asking Yudhiṣṭhira to resort to Bhīṣma for instruction. Yudhiṣṭhira requested Kṛṣṇa to grant Bhīṣma the sight of his divine person. Kṛṣṇa caused Satyaki to let Dāruka yoke his chariot with Sugrīva and Çaibya, etc. (XII, 46). Description of the bed of arrows on which Bhīṣma lay, surrounded by R. Vyāsa, etc. (η). Bhīṣma hymned Kṛṣṇa (θ). Kṛṣṇa moved by Bhīṣma's adorations, bestowed upon him heavenly knowledge compassing the Past, the Present, and the Future, and went away. Those holy brahmanas adored Bhīṣma and Kṛṣṇa. Seeing the devotion of Bhīṣma, Kṛṣṇa suddenly rose from his seat and ascended his chariot with Satyaki; Yudhiṣṭhira and Arjuna mounted another; Bhīmasena and the twins a third; Kṛpa, Yuyutsu, and Saṅjaya on their respective chariots (XII, 47).—§ 638: Then Kṛṣṇa, etc. (a), proceeded to Kurukṣetra (description). Kṛṣṇa pointed out to Yudhiṣṭhira the five lakes of Rāma Bhārgava. Requested by Yudhiṣṭhira (XII, 48), Kṛṣṇa related: Rāmopākhyāna (b). Then he proceeded quietly in his chariot (XII, 49).—§ 639: Yudhiṣṭhira's eulogy of Rāma (a).

Beholding from a distance the spot on which Bhishma lay (on the banks of the river Oghavati), Yudhishtira, etc. (β), descended from their chariots and approached and saluted the R. (headed by Vyāsa). Seeing Bhishma on the point of death, Kṛṣṇa addressed him kindly (γ), and eulogized him ("competent to subjugate D., G., As., Y., and Rā.; spoken of by brahmins as the ninth of the Vasus; knowing the knowledge of the caturhotra — v. BR. — and the Sāṅkhya and Yoga, etc., the Vedas and the Purāṇas") (XII, 50). Bhishma saluted Kṛṣṇa (δ), and beheld his eternal form. Kṛṣṇa said that it was owing to Bhishma's devotion that he had displayed his celestial form to him; "those regions, O king! are ready for thee whence there is no return; fifty-six days still remain for thee to live; when Sūrya turns to his northerly course, you shall go there; D. and V., riding on their chariots, are waiting for thee invisibly." Kṛṣṇa asked Bhishma to instruct Yudhishtira, etc.; "when thou wilt leave this world for that, all knowledge will expire with thee" (XII, 51). Bhishma alleged physical weakness and mental darkness as reasons for his inability to obey Kṛṣṇa, and he also hesitated to speak in Kṛṣṇa's presence. Kṛṣṇa removed Bhishma's pain and granted him power to recollect everything and behold the universe like a fish in a limpid stream. M.-r. with Vyāsa adored Kṛṣṇa with words, accompanied by Ṛe, Yajus, and Sāman verses; celestial flowers fell, and Aps. sang, etc. At sunset the M.-r., rising up, saluted Kṛṣṇa, Bhishma, and Yudhishtira. Upon this, Kṛṣṇa (etc.) (ε), returned to Hastinapura, after having saluted Bhishma, saying that they would return next day (description) (XII, 52). Kṛṣṇa passed the night happily, performed his morning rites, and was welcomed with music and song at early dawn; asked by Kṛṣṇa, Sātyaki saw Yudhishtira and apprised him of Kṛṣṇa's readiness to accompany him into the presence of Bhishma. Yudhishtira asked Arjuna to see that his chariot was made ready; then he, with the twins, etc. (ζ), proceeded to Kṛṣṇa's abode. Kṛṣṇa, accompanied by Sātyaki, mounted his chariot, yoked with Balahaka, etc. (η), urged by Dāraka. The princes set out. Arrived near Bhishma (surrounded by M.-r.), Kṛṣṇa, etc. (θ), alighting from their chariots, saluted R. by raising their right hands. Yudhishtira approached Bhishma, eying him timidly (XII, 53).—§ 640: Many R. and Sā., etc. (α), came to Bhishma. Nārada urged the Pāṇḍavas to take advantage of the short span of life still left to Bhishma for soliciting him to discourse on morality. Yudhishtira requested Kṛṣṇa to put questions to Bhishma. Bhishma's cheerful answer. He enquired of Kṛṣṇa why he was desired to discourse on morality and the duties of kings, Kṛṣṇa's divine self being best fitted to do so; Kṛṣṇa explained that his motive was only the enhancement of Bhishma's glory; "thou hast always worshipped R. and D." (XII, 54). Bhishma consented to discourse on morality and duty, and desired Yudhishtira to question him. Kṛṣṇa introduced Yudhishtira to Bhishma, who comforted Yudhishtira, saying that what he had done he had done in observance of kshatriya duties. Yudhishtira humbly approached Bhishma and touched his feet; Bhishma, kissing his head, asked him to take a seat and question him without anxiety (XII, 55). Yudhishtira solicited Bhishma to discourse on kingly duties which are regarded as the root of all other duties in the world. Bhishma, howing to Dharma, Kṛṣṇa (who is Brāhman in full), and the brahmins, set forth the general duties of kings ("as regards R. also, truth is their great wealth"); he quoted two ślokas of Manu: "fire has sprung from water, the kshatriya from the brahman, and iron from stone; these three can exert their force on every other thing; but on their origins (yonishu), it is extinguished (śamyati)"; and two ślokas of M.-r. Uṣanas (a brahman who rushes to battle may be chastised by a kshatriya); and a śloka of Brhaspati (according to B.) (a king should not always be mild, nor always fierce) (XII, 56). Continuation of Bhishma's discourse, enjoining readiness for action on kings; quoting a śloka sung by Uṣanas ("like a snake swallowing up mice"; cf. ch. 23); and one by king Marutta, agreeably to Brhaspati's opinion; Bāhu's son, king Sagara, who exiled his eldest son Asamañjas, who used to drown the children of the citizens in the Sarayu; R. Uddālaka who cast off his favourite son Çetaketu, because the latter used to invite brahmins with deceptive promises of entertainment. The king should administer justice like Yama and amass wealth like Kubera. He quoted a verse sung in days of old by Bhārgava [i.e. Vālmiki (cf. Hopkins, p. 61)], in the narrative called Rāmācarita, on king[ly duties] ("one should first select a king; then should he select a wife, and then earn wealth; if there be no king, what would become of his wife and acquisitions?") (XII, 57). Continuation of Bhishma's discourse, inculcating that protection is the very essence of kingly duties, quoting Brhaspati, etc. (β), and verses sung by Brhaspati ("by exertion the amṛta was obtained, by exertion the Asuras were slain," etc.). Vyāsa, etc. (γ), expressed their delight with the discourse. R. and the princes left Bhishma for the night and ascended their chariots; then they bathed in the Dṛshadvati, offered oblations of water to their ancestors, etc., and entered Hastinapura (XII, 58).—§ 641: The next morning the Pāṇḍavas and the Yādavas set out to Kurukshetra, approached Bhishma and saluted the R.; Yudhishtira enquired about the origin of the word rājan ("king"). Bhishma's answer: In the Kṛta age sovereignty first began; the population of the earth became sinful; the Vedas, etc., were lost; D. applied to Brāhman, who composed a treatise of 100,000 lessons, on virtue, profit, and pleasure, and emancipation, etc. (description). Brāhman, addressing the gods, said that his work, aided by Chastisement (Dandantī), would protect the world. Çiva studied the great work and abridged it (then called Vaiçālaksha, in 10,000 lessons) for Indra, who abridged it further to 5,000 lessons, and called it Bahudantaka; Brhaspati further abridged it to 3,000 lessons, and called it Barhaspatya; Kārya [i.e. Uṣanas] (the preceptor of yoga) further abridged it to 1,000 lessons. Thus, in view of the period of men's lives and [the general] decrease, that science (çāstra) was abridged by M.-r. Asked by the gods, who deserved to have superiority among men, Viṣṇu created by his will a son, Virajas; but he inclined to renunciation; and so did Virajas's son Kṛtimat and the latter's son Kardama. Kardama's son Anaṅga became a protector of creatures, fully conversant with the science of chastisement.

Then follows the history of Pythu Vainya (f). Thus the tales of all past events (āgamaḥ ca Purāṇāṇām), the origin of M.-r., etc. (e) were all treated of in this treatise of Brāhman (Pañtāmaha çāstra) (XII, 58). Requested by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discoursed on the general duties of the four orders and the special duties of each of the orders. Sacrifice has been laid down for the śādra also, but without svāha and vashatkūtra or any other mantra; he should perform pāka-yajñas, where the dakṣiṇā is pūrṇapātra (v. the note of PCR., p. 195); in days of old a śādra of the name of Pañjarana gave a dakṣiṇā of 100,000 pūrṇapātras according to the ordinance called Āindrāgnya (B. Āindrāgna). Devotion cleanses all sacrifices. The members of the three other classes have all sprung from the brahman; the brahman are the gods of the very gods. The śādra, who is without Ṛ, Yajus, and Sāman, has Prajāpati for his god, and devotion for his sacrifice. A verse sung in praise of sacrifice by the Vaiśvānara munis. The homas called skanna and askanna (XII, 60). The four modes of life specified (ṛ). M.-r. cite a verse sung by Nārāyaṇa (XII, 61). The four stages of life have been laid down for the brahman; the other three orders do not adopt them. What duties are improper for a brahman (XII, 62). Continuation. The duties in the four stages of life stated more specifically. A kṣatriya, for leading the life of Ṛ, may adopt the dhikṣu mode of life; [but] a life of mendicancy is not obligatory upon the three orders (XII, 63). The nature of kingly duties. "It has been told to you how, in days of old, many kings repaired to Viśṇu (Nārāyaṇa) for the sake of the science of chastisement. S., etc. (ṇ) are all observant of kṣatriya duties. In days of old when Dā had multiplied, Mādhātṛ became king and performed a great sacrifice from desire of beholding Nārāyaṇa (Viśṇu), who, in the form of Indra, had a discourse with him touching Viśṇu, extolling the kṣatriya duties above all other duties, and citing the example of Viśṇu himself, who for the sake of D and R, and Brahmān and the brahman, slew all his foes among the As. (XII, 64). Indra extolled the kṣatriya duties. Asked by Mādhātṛ, he set forth the duties of the Yavanas, etc. (ṇ). Then Nārāyaṇa (in the form of Indra), accompanied by M., repaired to his eternal abode (XII, 65). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discoursed in detail on the four stages of life (XII, 66). What should be the characteristics of kingdoms. In days of old, in consequence of anarchy, men met with destruction; they made certain compacts, but soon repaired to Brahmān to get a king; Manu was prevailed upon to accept the kingdom, against getting one-fiftieth of their animals, one-tenth of their grain, one-quarter of their merit, etc. Manu then made his round through the world, checking everywhere all acts of wickedness. Men desiring happiness must choose a king (XII, 67). Why the king is regarded as a god on earth. Bhīṣma recited the discourse between Brhaspati (the son of Angiras) and Vasumanas (king of Kośala); Brhaspati described the evils of anarchy; the king becomes Agni, etc. (i). Vasumanas thenceforth began to protect his subjects (XII, 68). The special duties of a king; the duties of a king in case of an invasion by a stronger monarch, quoting Brhaspati (v. 2619) and two verses (v. 2667-8) sung by Angiras (i.e. Brhaspati). The blessedness of chastisement; the king causes the Kṛta age, etc. (κ), to set in (XII, 69). The thirty-six virtues that a king should possess. Hearing the words of Bhīṣma, king Yudhiṣṭhira, protected by Bhīṣma, etc., worshipped Bhīṣma, and from that time began to rule according to his teaching (XII, 70). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma explained the way in which the king should discharge the duty of protection (XII, 71). The qualifications of the king's priest: Bhīṣma recited the old story about the discourse between Āila's son Purāravas and

Mātariṣvan, explaining the order of birth of the four classes (from Brahmān's mouth, arms, thighs, and feet, respectively) and their duties, the right of dominion appertaining to the brahman; therefore a king should appoint a priest; D., men, P., G., Us., and Rā. all depend upon sacrifices for their support, and sacrifices depend upon the king, who is Indra, Yama, and Dharma (XII, 72). The effects of a disunion between *brahman*s and *kṣatriya*s: the old story about the discourse of Āila's son and Kaśyapa; the brahman and the kṣatriya are said to be the progenitors of all men; in consequence of the sins perpetrated by sinful men, the god Rudra appears in the kingdom. Asked by Āila, Kaśyapa explained who Rudra is and what his acts are (Rudra exists in the hearts of men; his shape is like that of the wind-gods). Then follows a discussion of the following question: "If chastisement touches the wicked and the good equally, why should the good yet abstain from acts of wickedness" (XII, 73). The preservation and growth of the king rest upon the king's priest: Mucukundopakhyana (g), the old narrative about the discourse between king Mucukunda and king Vaiśravaṇa (the lord of Alakā, Kubera) (XII, 74). The conduct by which a king aggrandises his subjects and wins regions of felicity hereafter. Yudhiṣṭhira did not see any merit in sovereignty and wished to retire into the woods. Bhīṣma urged Yudhiṣṭhira to put forth manliness and exertion (XII, 75). The difference between *brahman*s engaged in their own duties and those amongst them that are not so engaged (XII, 76). The king is the lord of all wealth except what belongs to the *brahman*s. The old narrative of the speech made by the Kaikya king unto a Rā., who was about to abduct him, but at last left him (XII, 77). Whether a brahman, in seasons of distress, can practise, as a means of livelihood, the duties of a vaiśya; what articles, in this case, he may sell; how the king should behave when he is opposed by all the orders of men; if *kṣatriya*s become hostile to *brahman*s, how the latter should be protected; Yudhiṣṭhira inquired whether, upon an anarchy happening, any man that protects and rules acquires merit; Bhīṣma answered in the affirmative; a king that does not or cannot protect is useless (XII, 78). The kind of persons that are eligible as royal priests; the limits or measure of the dakṣiṇā (XII, 79). Who should and who should not be trusted by the king (XII, 80). How the king should conduct himself for winning over kinsmen and friends: the old story of a discourse between Kṛṣṇa and Nārada: Kṛṣṇa said: "My heart is worried through the cruel speeches of my kinsmen; might resides in Saṅkarṣaṇa, mildness in Gada; and as regards Pradyumna, he surpasses even myself in beauty of person; [but] many others of the Andhakas and the Vṛkṣas are possessed of great prosperity and might. What can be more painful than [my relation to] Ahuka and Akrūra (v. the note of PCR., p. 260)?" Nārada said that the calamity was due to Kṛṣṇa himself; "the kingdom cannot be taken back from Babhrū and Ugrasena, employ soft words, etc.; the Yadavas, etc. (λ) are dependent on thee; Ṛ. always pray for thy advancement; thou art the lord of all creatures, etc." (XII, 81). The second means by which a king may win kinsmen and friends; an old story is cited of what the sage (brahmarṣi) Kālakarṣkiya had said to the Kośala king Kaśmadarṣin; Kālakarṣkiya travelled through the country with a crow in a cage and observed the misdeeds of all the officers of the king, saying that it was the crow that told him all this, and related it to the king; the crow then was found pierced with a shaft within the cage; he quoted Yama as to the painful lot of those that serve the king; "this thy kingdom is like the river Sita, boats sink in it; thy father regarded me lovingly as his friend; when distress overtook this kingdom during the reign of thy father I performed many penances." Kṣemadārṣin then took a minister from the kṣatriya order, and appointed Kālakavṛkṣṭya as his purohita, and subjugated the whole earth (XII, 82). The qualifications of legislators, ministers, courtiers, and counsellors (XII, 83). The merits of agreeableness of speech; the old account of a conversation between Brhaspati and Çakra (i.e. Indra) (XII, 84). Which are the affairs of state that a king has to deal with, and by which persons ought they to be executed? (XII, 85). The kind of city which a king should have (XII, 86). How a kingdom should be consolidated and how it should be protected (XII, 87). How a king should behave if he wishes for wealth (XII, 88). A king should not cut down trees yielding edible fruits. How one man acquires superiority over the rest; the gifts made by thee in this world support D., P., men, N., Rā., birds, and animals (XII, 89). The duties of kings (kṣatradharmān) explained by Angiras Uthya to Mandātṛ Yauvanāçra, about the king's power being only a trust for the good of his people and not for the gratification of his own caprices; the R. made the king, intending that he should be the embodiment of righteousness on earth; he is called rājan ("king") in whom righteousness shines (rājata); he in whom there is no righteousness is called a vr̥ṣala (yāminvilitgate dharmah (= vr̥ṣah)); dharmā ("righteousness") comes (aravati) from dhana ("wealth") or from dhāraṇa ("restraining"); Svayambhu (Brahmān) created Dharma for the advancement and growth of creatures; in consequence of his malice towards the brahmins Çṛi deserted Bali Vairocana and repaired to Indra, and Bali indulged in many vain regrets. The gr̥tis declare that Unrighteousness (Adharma) begat a son named Pride (Darpa) upon Çṛi; Pride led many D. and As. to ruin, and many R.-r.; when the king does not restrain vice, sinful Rā., and persons of neutral sex, etc., begin to take birth even in respectable families, etc. (XII, 90). Continuation of Uthya's discourse. "The ages Kṛta, etc. (μ), are all dependent on the conduct of the king. It is said that the Creator (Dhātṛ) created power for the object of protecting the weak; weakness is indeed a great being, for everything depends upon it. The king is Yama himself. This is the way in which Indra, etc. (ν) have acted. D., R., P., and G. sing the praises, both here and hereafter, of that king whose conduct is righteous." Thus addressed by Uthya, Mandātṛ did as he was directed, and became the sole lord of the wide earth (XII, 91). How a righteous king desirous of acting righteously should behave: the old story of what M.-r. Vamadeva sang in ancient times to king Vasumanas (XII, 92); the consequences that result from the king's acting unrighteously. "Yayāti Nāhuṣa, thus having propounded the king's lore (rājopaniṣadām), said that a king should slay even contemptible foes" (XII, 93). Continuation of Vamadeva's discourse. Thus addressed by Vamadeva, king Vasumanas did as he was directed (XII, 94). How a kṣatriya should act who desires to subjugate another (XII, 95). A king should never desire to subjugate the earth by unrighteous means. It was by such behaviour that Indra got the sovereignty of the world. King Pratardana, subjugating his foes in great battle, took all their wealth, including their very grain and medicinal herbs, but left their land untouched. King Divodāsa, after subjugating his foes, brought away the very remnants of their sacrificial fires, their clarified butter, and their food; for this reason he was deprived of the merit of his conquest. King Nābhāga gave away whole kingdoms with their rulers as sacrificial presents to the brahmins, excepting the wealth of learned brahmins and ascetics (XII, 96). Yudhisṭhira's condemnation of kṣatriya practices. Bhishma pointed out that by chastening the wicked, protecting the good, performing sacrifices, etc., a king cleanses himself, and ultimately obtains a residence in Indra's heaven (XII, 97). The regions of felicity acquired by heroes killed in battle: the old story of the discourse between Ambarisha and Indra. Ambarisha, the son of Nābhāga, having repaired to heaven, beheld his own generalissimo Sudasa in the company of Indra, and going to regions still higher. Indra explained to Ambarisha the sacrifice of battle. "That warrior who, having slain the commander of the hostile army, mounts the vehicle of his fallen antagonist, comes to be regarded as possessed of the powers of Viṣṇu and the intelligence of Brhaspati . . . thousands of Aps. covet him for their lord; having slain Jambha, etc. (f), I myself have become the chief of the celestials" (XII, 98). The old story of the battle between Pratardana and king Janaka, who cheered his troops by showing them both heaven (full of G.-girls, etc.) and hell; his warriors vanquished their foes in battle (XII, 99). How kings should lead their troops to battle. "It is proper to set the troops in motion on Caitṛi or Mārgaṣṭirhi. Keeping Saptarishayaḥ (Ursa major) behind them, the troops should fight; the wind, the sun, and Çukra (Venus) should blow and shine from behind them; the wind is superior to the sun, the sun to Çukra. When a small number of troops is to fight with a great many, the array called Sacīmukha should be formed" (XII, 100). How the troops should be accoutred, armed, and disposed for battle. The Gāndhāras, etc. (o), fight best with their curved knives (nakhara) and lances. The Uçinaras are possessed of great strength and skilled in all kinds of weapons. The Prāçyas are skilled in fighting from the backs of elephants and conversant with stratagems (kūṭayodhinah). The Yavanas, etc. (π), are well skilled in fighting with bare arms. The Dakṣiṇātyas are skilled in fighting sword in hand. Indications of courage (XII, 101). What the indications are of the future success of an army. "Çambara has said that having afflicted a foe first, forgiveness should be shown afterwards" (XII, 102). How a king should behave towards a foe that is mild, towards one that is fierce, and towards one that has many allies: the old narrative of the discourse between Brhaspati and Indra; Brhaspati recommended conciliation or lulling a foe into security; other means; a king should never slay a large number of the defeated troops, etc.; the indications of wicked persons. Indra, in subduing his foes, acted strictly according to the words of Brhaspati, and reduced all his enemies to subjection (XII, 103). How a righteous king deprived of his kingdom should act; the discourse between Kṣemadārṣin and Kālakavṛkṣṭya in days of old, when prince (nṛpasutaḥ) Kṣemadārṣin had become weak and fallen into great distress; "only a fool, deprived of former prosperity, censures the Supreme Ordainer (Dhātṛ)" (XII, 104). Continuation of the discourse; "do thou serve the Mithila king Janaka . . .; cause thy enemy to perform the great sacrifice called vicvrajit and divest him by that means of all his possessions, and cause an ascetic conversant with yoga to make thy foe desire to adopt renunciation" (XII, 105). The king's reply discountenancing deceit and fraud. Asked by Kulakavyakhiya, the Vidaha king Janaka made friends with the Kośala prince Kishomadāryin, took him to Mithilā, and bestowed upon him his own daughter, etc. (XII, 106). How the king should behave towards the aristocracy (XII, 107). Important duties in brief; the relative superiority of parents and preceptors (XII, 108). Characteristics of truth and falsehood; "even a person that is disresponsible . . . may succeed in earning great merit as the hunter Bulāka by slaying the blind [beast]"; Kauçika again, on the banks of the Gangā, obtained great merit (sic! cf. PCR., p. 352, and Kauçika); a deceitful person always wishes to betake himself to the practice of As. (PCR. amānaraṇa dharmam) (XII, 109). How many creatures avoid difficulties? "they that worship with devotion the god Nīrāyaṇa (Kṛṣṇa), that Supreme Lord of all creatures . . . succeed in overcoming all difficulties. He is always engaged in doing what is agreeable to Arjuna, and also to Yudhiṣṭhira." Blessing upon the reader (XII, 110). How may good and wicked men be recognized? the old story of the discourse between a tiger and a jackal: in ancient times, in a rich city called Parika, there was a cruel king Paurika, who was reborn as a jackal; remembering his former prosperity he became filled with grief and abstained from meat, and became compassionate and truthful, etc., and lived upon fruit that had dropped from the trees; he dwelt in a vast crematorium, his birth-place. The other jackals in vain endeavoured to make him eat carrion, promising to give him food. He consented to become the minister of a tiger, on the condition that the latter should always meet with him alone and in secret, etc. The old servants of the king (i.e. the tiger) first in vain tried to bribe him; then they secretly placed the meat intended for the king in the house of the jackal. The king ordered the jackal to be slain. The mother of the king dissuaded him ("the firmament seems to be like the solid base of a vessel, the fire-fly seems to be like the actual spark of fire; in reality, however, the sky has no base, and there is no fire in the fire-fly; there is necessity for secreting"). A righteous agent of the jackal discovered everything about the false accusation. Notwithstanding the entreaties of the king, the jackal retired to the forest, gave up his body by sitting in prāya, and proceeded to heaven (XII, 111). A king should not behave after the manner disclosed in the history of a camel: There was, in the Kṛta age, a huge camel who had recollection of all the acts of his former life; he practised severe austerities in the forest; Brahmān granted him the boon that he should have a neck so long that he could seize any food at even the end of 100 yojanas. He became idle. One day a great storm arose. The camel placed his head and a portion of his neck within the cave of a mountain; it began to pour in torrents; a jackal with his wife entered the cave for shelter and began to eat of the camel's neck, and thus the camel met with his death because of his idleness. "Manu has said that victory depends upon intelligence" (XII, 112). The old story of the discourse between the Ocean and the Rivers. The Ocean (the refuge of the foes of the gods) asked the Rivers why the latter never washed away a cane; Gangā replied that the reason is that the cane bends (XII, 113). How a man of worth should behave when insulted with harsh words in an assembly (XII, 114). The qualifications of persons that may be employed by the king. "Criminal laws should be duly administered, even after the manner of Çāṅkhya and Likhita" (XII, 115). Bṛishma related the story of the dog who by favour of the R. became a çarabha and was, for misconduct, retransformed into his own canine form; Bṛishma had heard the tale in the hermitage of Rāma Jāmadagnya, recited by many R.; the dog first was transformed into a leopard, then into a tiger subsisting upon the other animals of the forest (XII, 116); then into an elephant > a lion > a çarabha (having eight legs and eyes on the forehead); one day, eagerly thirsting for blood, he wished to slay the sage, who then retransformed him into a dog (XII, 117); the dog became very cheerless, and was driven by R. from his hermitage. Continuation of Bṛishma's discourse on the qualifications of servants (XII, 118). The lessons to be drawn from the story of the dog that was transformed into a çarabha (XII, 119). How a king should exercise the duty of protection; "the human body is the residence of Indra, etc. (p)" (XII, 120). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bṛishma discoursed about the origin and character of chastisement ("the foremost of all beings among D., R., P., Y., Rā., Pç., Sā., As., etc."), quoting Manu and Brahmān ("the first word": prāgacanam); some of the names of chastisement (σ); "beggars, principal judges, astrologers, performers of propitiatory and Atharvan rites, treasury, allies, grain, etc., constitute the body, composed of seven attributes and eight limbs, of a kingdom; chastisement is another powerful limb of a kingdom"; it springs from Brahmān (the creator of the universe with D., As., Rā., etc.) and the Veda; several kinds of vyavahāra; Brahmān has laid down: "neither mother nor father, nor brother, nor wife, nor priest, is unpunishable with that king who rules agreeably to his duty" (XII, 121). The discourse between the Aṅga king Vasuhoma (who was pious and, with his spouse, always practised penances) and Indra's friend king Mandhātṛ, at Muñjapṛsthā (esteemed by P. and D.-r.) on that peak of Himavat (near Meru) (yatra Muñjapṛstho Rāmo jātākaranam adīyat; Nil. is silent) a favourite haunt of Rudra, where Vasuhoma came to be regarded as a D.-r. Asked by Mandhātṛ about the origin of chastisement, Vasuhoma (who knew the doctrines of Bṛhaspati and Uçanas) related: Once Brahmān, desiring to perform a sacrifice, failed to find a priest; he conceived in his brain; after 1,000 years he sneezed; the foetus, Kahupa, fell from his head; he became a lord of creatures and a priest in the sacrifice of Brahmān. Chastisement disappeared; a great confusion set in; Brahmān repaired to Viṣṇu (armed with an enormous çūla), who created his own self into the form of chastisement (having righteousness for its legs); from that form the goddess Sarasvatī created the Science of Chastisement (daṇḍanīti); after this Viṣṇu (çalavarāyudha) made Indra the ruler of D., Yama Vaivasvata of P., Kubera of treasures and Rā., Meru of the mountains, the Ocean of the rivers, Varuṇa of the waters and As., Death of life and all living things, Fire of all things possessed of energy, Mahādeva of R., Yatishṭha of the brahmanas, Jātavedas of V., Sūrya of all luminous bodies, the Moon of Stars and constellations, Aṃsumat of herbs, Skanda (of twelve arms) of spirits and ghostly beings; Time of all creatures and the fourfold death (v. PCR.) and of grief and joy. Upon the completion of that sacrifice, Mahādeva made over chastisement to Viṣṇu > Angiras > Indra and Martī > Bṛghu > all R. > Lp. > Kahupa > Manu Vaivasvata (çṛāddhadeva) > his sons. Chastisement remains awake, protecting all creatures, being in the hands of successive holders: Indra > Agni > Varuṇa > Prajāpati > righteousness > the son of Brahmān, i.e. Law > energy > the herbs > the mountains > the juices > Nirṛti > the planets and the luminous bodies in heaven > the Vedas > the form of Viṣṇu with equine head > Brahmān > Mahādeva > Viṣṇudeva > R. > Soma > D. > the brahmins > the kshatriyas. Several names of Mahādeva (τ). Blessing upon the reader (XII, 122). Bhishma's discourse on Virtue, Wealth, and Pleasure. The narrative of the discourse in olden times between R. Kāmaṇḍa[ka] and king Āṅgarishṭha (XII, 123). How may one acquire a virtuous behaviour? Bhishma recited the discourse of Dhṛtarāṣṭra to Duryodhana; as the latter was burning with envy at the sight of the prosperity of Yudhisṭhira and his brothers at Indraprastha and his mistakes in the palace he, accompanied by Karṇa, went to Dhṛtarāṣṭra with the same question; "10,000 śatākas eat at Yudhisṭhira's palace off plates of gold; his steeds are of the Tittiri and the Kalmāsha breeds (? so PCR.; agvāṇa tittiri-kalmāsha), etc." Dhṛtarāṣṭra said: "Mādhātṛ conquered the whole world in only one night, Janamejaya in the course of three, Nabha in seven," and he related the story of Indra's taking away from Dai. Prahlāda the latter's prosperity; Prahlāda in days of yore, by the merit of his behaviour, snatched from Indra his sovereignty and reduced the three worlds to subjection. Indra repaired for knowledge to Bṛhaspati, who caused him to repair to Bhārgava (Uṇas), who said that Prahlāda had better knowledge. Indra, in the shape of a brahman, repaired to Prahlāda, who said that he was ever obedient to the teachings of Ṣakra, etc. Prahlāda granted him a boon, and Indra wished him to acquire Prahlāda's nature (ṣīla). Prahlāda was filled with fear, but granted the boon. A flame of light issued out of his body: it was the embodiment of his nature, which was going away and entered the body of Indra. Then a similar apparition issued out: it was Righteousness; then Truth; then Good Deeds; then Might; then Prosperity, that informed him that the brahman was Ṣakra. Asked by Duryodhana, Dhṛtarāṣṭra told him how moral conduct (ṣīla) might be acquired (XII, 124). The characteristics of Hope; "Duryodhana destroyed the hope I had cherished," said Yudhisṭhira. The discourse between R.-r. Sumitra (of the Haiḥaya race) and Rahabha. Sumitra, when hunting, was led away by a deer that he had pierced with an arrow; he shot at it again, but in vain (XII, 125); arrived at an asylum he asked R. about Hope (XII, 126); Rahabha told him that he had visited Badari, the asylum of Nara and Nārāyaṇa, where the sage Aśvaśiras reads the Vedas; "having performed my ablutions in the lake and offered oblations of water to P. and D., I entered the asylum; not far from that spot I entered another retreat, where I beheld a very tall and emaciated R., Tanu, exceedingly feeble; he began to discourse in the midst of R.; a king came with his forces and ladies on a chariot drawn by fleet steeds; the name of this king was Vṛadīyuma; his son and only child Bhāridīyuma had been missing, and Vṛadīyuma came there in course of his wanderings amidst the forest in pursuit of the missing one. Tanu said that a R. had been insulted by Bhāridīyuma, who, asked by him for a golden jar and vegetable barks, contemptuously had refused to gratify the ascetic, who became disappointed (XII, 127). Tanu hung down his head; in former days he had been disappointed by the king, and he had practised penances for a long time, and determined to drive away hope from his mind. He then discoursed about the slenderness of Hope. Then he caused the lost prince to be brought thither, rebuked the king, and displayed himself to be the god of righteousness." Thus addressed by Rahabha, king Sumitra gave up his hope (XII, 128). Bhishma cited the old narrative of the discourse between Gautama and Yama. Gautama owned a wide retreat on the Pāripātra hills; for 60,000 years he underwent ascetic austerities there. One day Lp. Yama (Dharma) came and spoke about truth, etc. (XII, 129). How may a king in great danger and distress left by his friends behave? (XII, 130).

[Rājanīyamahābhāgya(m)] ("the grandeur of the kshatriyas"). § 467 (Mūrk.): To the horse-sacrifice of king Aśṭaka Vaiṣvāmītri all kings repaired, also his brothers Pratardana, Vasumanas, and Ṣibi Auśinara. After the sacrifice was completed, these four took Nārada on their chariot and asked him who of them (as they were all blessed with long life and virtuous) should first fall from Heaven? Nārada answered that Aśṭaka should first come down, because he had praised himself for having given away thousands of kine; then Pratardana, because he, though he had given to brahmins successively the four horses yoked to his chariot, and then had drawn the chariot himself, had done so with detraction (asūyati); then Vasumanas, because he, though he had twice at the svastirācana for the sake of a flowery chariot (pushparathasya, v. 13313, see the note of PCR., p. 601) given the chariot to Nārada, because he praised it, had not done so on a third occasion; Nārada himself would come down before Ṣibi, because Ṣibi, at the request of Vidhātṛ in the disguise of a brahman, who was desirous of trying Ṣibi, had cooked his son Brhadgarbha as food for the brahman without being angry, though the brahman meanwhile had set fire to Ṣibi's abode and treasury and arsonal, and when the brahman ordered Ṣibi himself to eat his son's body Ṣibi was willing to do it; but the brahman said, "Thou hast conquered wrath, there is nothing that thou canst not give to the brahmins," and withdrew his hand, and then Ṣibi beheld his son like a child of the gods, while the brahman disappeared; and that Ṣibi had not done this for fame or wealth, etc., but because this is not practised by the sinful (III, 198).

Rājapura, a city of the Kāmbojas. § 589 (Droṇābhishhekap.): VII, 4, 119 (Karṇa proceeded to R. and vanquished the Kāmbojas).

[Rājasūyārambhaparvan(°va)] ("the beginning of the rājasūya sacrifice," the 22nd of the minor parvas of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Rājasūyasya ārambha).—§ 272: Yudhisṭhira consulted his counsellors, brothers, ptvījes, ministers,

Dhaumya, Draipāyana, etc., as to the rājāsāya (“in which rāsis of austere vows establish six fires singing mantras of the Sāmaveda; at the conclusion thereof the performer, when installed in the sovereignty, is rewarded with the fruit of all sacrifices, including the darvithomas”). They all encouraged him to perform it. All people lived happily under his sway and loved him (therefore he was called Ajātaśatru); Bhīma ruled over all men justly, Arjuna protected the people from enemies, Sahadeva administered justice impartially, Nakula behaved towards everybody with humility. There was no extortion, disease, etc. Yudhishtira sent a messenger to Kṛṣṇa in Dvāravātī, and Kṛṣṇa came to Indraprastha accompanied by Indrasena, and was consulted by Yudhishtira (II, 13).—§ 273: Kṛṣṇa said that Yudhishtira, in order to become samrāj, ought to slay the Magadha king Jarāsandha, and deliver the princes whom Jarāsandha held shut up in a mountain hole in order to sacrifice them to Mahādeva (i.e. Śiva). “The now existing kshatriyas are descended from the remnants of those who were exterminated by Rāma. They represent themselves to be the descendants of Aila and Ikshvāku; of those there are 100 families. The Bhojas, descendants of Yayāti, are great and scattered all over the earth; but now Jarāsandha, ruling the middle land (i.e. Mathurā, Nīl), has overpowered them. His allies are (1) Çiçupāla, who has become his senāpati; (2) the Karūṣa king Vakra, who fights by illusion (māyayodhin); (3-4) Hama and Dimbhaka (see below); (5-8) Dantavakra, Karūṣa, Karabha, Meghavāhana; (9) Bhagadatta, the Yavana king, the ruler of the west, who bears on his head the most wonderful gem on earth, the old friend of thy father, and who chastises Muru and Naraka; he obeys Jarāsandha, but in his heart he is tied by affection to thee; (10) the king of Anga, Vaṅga, Puṇḍra, and of the Kirātas, Paṇḍraka Vāsudeva, who among the Cedis is called Puruṣottama, and always bears, from foolishness, the distinctive signs of Kṛṣṇa; (11) Bhīṣmaka, king of the Bhojas, the friend of Indra, who governs a fourth part of the world, who by his learning has conquered the Pāṇḍyas, Krathas, and Kaṇḍikas, and whose brother Ākrṣi is like to Rāma Jāmadagnya, has placed himself under Jarāsandha, though Kṛṣṇa, etc., his relatives, are engaged every day in doing what is agreeable to him. Only Yudhishtira’s maternal uncle, the Kuntī king Puruji, who has his dominions in the west and the south, regards Yudhishtira with affection. The following peoples have fled for fear of Jarāsandha: (1) the eighteen tribes of the northern Bhojas have fled towards the west; (2-10) the Çurasenas, Bhadrakāras, Bodhas, Çalvas, Paṭaccaras, Susthalas, Mukuttas (B. Su°), Kulindas, and Kuntis; (11-13) the Çalcāyana kings with their brethren and followers, the southern Pāṇcālas, and the eastern Koçalas, have all fled to the Kuntis (?); (14-15) the Matsyas and the Sannyastapādas (? so B.; C. Sanya°) have left their dominions in the north and fled into the southern country; (16) all the Pāṇcālas have fled in all directions.” Jarāsandha’s relations to the Yādavas were the following: Kaṁsa, having persecuted the Yādavas, married Asī and Prāpti, daughters of Jarāsandha and sisters of Sahadeva, and began also to oppress the old chiefs of the Bhojas, who sought the help of Kṛṣṇa, etc.; Kṛṣṇa bestowed upon Ākrūra the daughter of Āhuka, and with Saṅkarṣaṇa (i.e. Balarāma) he slew Kaṁsa and Sundama. Then Jarāsandha took up arms, and the eighteen tribes (kulair aṣṭādaçavaraiḥ (?), differently Nīl.) thought they would be unable to check him even in 300 years. His friends Hama and Dimbhaka were incapable of being slain by weapons. Some other king, named Hama (differently Nīl), was slain by Rāma in the battle of the eighteen tribes (aṣṭādaçavaraiḥ ?); then Dimbhaka, thinking that he could not live without Hama, killed himself in the Yamunā, and Hama, hearing that, also jumped into the Yamunā; then Jarāsandha returned to his kingdom, and the Yādavas continued to live at Mathurā. But the widow of Kaṁsa (PCR. Hama), the daughter of Jarāsandha, urging him to revenge the death of her husband, the Yādavas fled from Mathurā, and took up their abode in Kuṣṇathali (i.e. Dvāravātī), adorned by Raivata, and strongly fortified the Gomanta mountains, three yojanas in length. “In the race of Kṛṣṇa there are 8,000 brothers [and cousins, PCR.]. Āhuka has 100 sons. Cārudeṣṇa with his brother, Cakradeva, Satyaki, Kṛṣṇa, Rauiṇeya (i.e. Balarāma), and Çāmba (like Çauri in battle) are seven heroes (rathāḥ); Kṛtavarma, Anādhyakṣi, Çamika, Samitiñjaya, Kaṅka, Çaṅku, and Kuntī are seven mahārathas; then there are also two sons of Andhakabhoja and himself; all these heroes, remembering the middle country, are now living among the Vṛṣṇis” (II, 14).—§ 274: Yudhishtira had some scruples, which were opposed by Bhīma and Kṛṣṇa, who cited from the Kṛta age five kings, who had become emperors (samrāj): Yauvanāçvi (i.e. Māndhātṛ) by the remission of taxes (B. jītvā jayyān, “by victories”), Bhagiratha by protection, [Arjuna-] Kṛtavīrya by asceticism, Bharata by strength, and Marutta by prosperity; 100 families of kings have been unable to oppose Jarāsandha; he has already brought eighty-six kings to the house of Paçupati (i.e. Śiva); when he has fourteen more he will offer them as sacrifices (II, 15).—Some further objections of Yudhishtira are refuted by Arjuna (II, 16).—§ 275: The origin of Jarāsandha was the following: The Magadha king Brhadratha, who had three akshauhīnis of troops, married the two twin daughters of the king of Kāçi, making an engagement never to show a preference for either. As he was childless he repaired to the rishi Caṇḍa-Kauçika, the son of Kākshtvat Gautama, who was sitting under a mango-tree. He gave a mango fruit to the king, who gave it to his queens. They then brought forth each one half of a child, which were thrown away, but, found and laid together by the rākshasi Jarā, became one living child (II, 17).—Jarā had been created by Śvayambhū for the destruction of the Dānavas and named Gṛhadevi (gṛhe gṛhe manushyaṇām nityam tiṣṭhāmi rākshasi, v. 730), and always lived in the king’s house and did him good, because there was on the walls a likeness of her endowed with youth and in the midst of children, and she was daily worshipped with scents, etc. The king ordered a great festival to be held in Magadha in honour of Jarā, and named the boy Jarāsandha (Jarayā sandhito, v. 739) (II, 18). Some time after Caṇḍa-Kauçika again came to Magadha, and foretold the greatness of Jarāsandha, that weapons should not hurt him, and that he should see Rudra. After having installed Jarāsandha, Brhadratha with his two wives retired to the woods and, after practising ascetic penances, ascended to heaven. When king Kaṁsa was slain by Vāsudeva (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), Jarāsandha, from Girivraja, whirling a mace ninety-nine times, hurled it towards Mathurā, where Kṛṣṇa was residing at that time; the mace fell at Gadavāsāna, near Mathurā, at a distance of ninety-nine yojanas [from Girivraja, PCR.]. He, with Hama and Dimbhaka (who were skilled in the nitiśāstra, v. 765), were more than a match for the three worlds; therefore, from policy, the Kukuras, Andhakas, and Vṛkṣas, chose not to fight with him (II, 19).

Rājasūyasya ārambha(h) ("the beginning of the rājasūya sacrifice"). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 408 (rājasūyasya ārambhah, i.e. Rājasūyārambhaparvan).

Rājasūyika(m) parva[n] ("the section relating to the Rājasūya sacrifice"). § 10 (Parvasa): I, 2, 318 (parva . . . R°m, i.e. Rājasūyikaparvan).

[Rājasūyikaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the Rājasūya sacrifice," the 25th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Rājasūyikaṃ parva.) § 286: Under Yudhishtira's rule the people were very happy, and great riches filled the treasury. Then Yudhishtira resolved upon the celebration of the rājasūya. Kṛṣṇa came there, having appointed Ānakundubhi to the command of the army. Then Yudhishtira, sitting with Dharmya, Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana, his brothers, etc., asked Kṛṣṇa to install himself in that sacrifice or to permit the Pāṇḍavas to be installed in it. Kṛṣṇa said that Yudhishtira ought to perform it and employ himself (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) in some office. Then Yudhishtira caused his minister (mantrin) Sahadeva to get the articles together that Dharmya might order as required for the sacrifice, and to let Indrasena and Viçoka and Puru, with Arjuna for his charioteer, engage in collecting food. Dvaipāyana himself became the brahman and appointed learned brahmins as ṛtvijes; Susāman ("the bull of the Dhananāyaya") became the sāmaga, Yājñavalkya the adhvaryu, Paila (the son of Tasu) the hotṛ accompanied by Dharmya, and their disciples and sons the hotṛagas (see BK.) who uttered benedictions, etc. Then Yudhishtira caused Sahadeva to dispatch messengers, who invited men of the four castes. Then the brahmins installed (dikṣhayān cakrire) Yudhishtira in the rājasūya sacrifice, the guests arrived, the artificers erected habitations, etc. Then Yudhishtira despatched Nakula to Hastinapura in order to fetch Bhisma and Droṇa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Vidura, Kṛpa, etc. (II, 33). Enumeration of kings who came to Yudhishtira's rājasūya (II, 34). — § 288: Yudhishtira saluted Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana, etc. (a), and appointed Duhṣasana to attend to the food, etc., Ayathāman to the brahmins, Saṅjaya to the kings, Bhisma and Droṇa to see what was done and what left undone, Kṛpa to attend to the diamonds, etc., and the dukṣiṇās; Vidura became the disburser, Duryodhana the receiver of the tributes (arhaṇāni), Kṛṣṇa washed the feet of the brahmins. Yudhishtira performed the sacrifice with six fires (II, 35). — § 292 (cf. Çiçupāla-vadhaparvan): Then the sacrifice was completed, watched by Kṛṣṇa. When the kings departed, the Pāṇḍavas, commanded by Yudhishtira, followed them to the confines of his dominions, one after another (a). Kṛṣṇa asked leave to go to Dvāraka, being thanked by Yudhishtira for his co-operation, and having bidden farewell to Prithā, etc. (β), and having performed his ablutions, etc., he walked round the Garuḍa-bannered chariot, which Dāruka had fetched, and ascending it set out for Dvāravati, followed on foot by the Pāṇḍavas, till they took leave. Now Duryodhana alone, with king Subala's son Çakuni, remained in the assembly house (II, 45).

[Rājyalābhaparvan(°va)] ("on the Pāṇḍavas' getting half of the kingdom," the 15th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Rājyalābha, Rājyalāmbha.) § 244: The Pāṇḍavas with Kuntī and Kṛṣṇa journeyed towards Hastinapura. Dhṛtarāṣṭra despatched Vikarna, Citrāsena, Droṇa, and Kṛpa to receive them. The inhabitants were filled with joy. In order to prevent any difference between them and their cousins, Dhṛtarāṣṭra caused them, with Kṛṣṇa in the van, to repair to Khāṇḍavaprastha, taking half the kingdom. With Dvaipāyana's assistance they measured out a piece of land for their city, which was very beautiful, and came to be called Indraprastha. Having settled the Pāṇḍavas there, Kṛṣṇa came back with Rāma to Dvāravati (I, 207).

— § 245: When the Pāṇḍavas were dwelling in happiness at Khāṇḍavaprastha, one day the Devarshi Nārada came to them, and recommended them to make an arrangement so that disunion might not arise among them for the sake of their common wife, mentioning how Sunda and Upasunda had killed each other for the sake of Tilottamā. Yudhishtira asked who those Asuras were, and who this Tilottamā was (I, 208). — § 246: Sundopasundopākhyāna (q.v.). The arrangement the Pāṇḍavas made was, that if one of them should be sitting with Draupadī, and one of the other ones should happen to see it, he would have to retire into the forest for twelve years and live as a brahmacārin. Rāmopākhyāna² ("the episode relating to Rāma Jāmadagnya"). § 638b (Itājadh.): Jahnu > Aja > Bakikāçya > Kuçika, who performed penances in order to get a son; Indra became his son:

Reika destined a certain portion of the sacrificial food (wherein had been placed the brahman energy) for Satyavati, which would give her a son of great wisdom, the foremost of brahmins; and another (wherein had been placed the sum total of kṣatriya energy) for her mother, which would give her for a son an invincible kṣatriya. Then Reika proceeded to the woods to practise penances. King Gādhi, on a tīrthayātrā, arrived at Reika's retreat with his queen. There the mother of Satyavati, from ignorance, exchanged the two portions of the food. Reika predicted that the son of Satyavati would become a terrible kṣatriya, but asked by Satyavati, he granted that not her son (Jamadagni) but her grandson (Paraçu-Rāma) would become such; her mother would give birth to a brahman (Viçvāmītra). Besides the other sciences, Rāma mastered the Dhanurveda; gratifying Mahadeva on Gandhamādana, he asked him for weapons, especially the axe, which made him unrivalled on earth. Meanwhile the virtuous kṣatriya, the Haihaya king Arjuna Kartavīrya, who had got 1,000 arms through the grace of Dattātreyā, having subjugated the whole earth with its mountains and seven islands, became a powerful emperor, and gave away the earth to the brahmins at a horse-sacrifice. Once, solicited by Agni, he gave alms to that deity: springing from the points of his shafts, Agni burnt villages, etc., and also the retreat of Āpava (i.e. Vasishṭha, Nīl.), who cursed Arjuna, saying that Rāma should lop off his arms. Arjuna, always devoted to peace, always regardful of brahmins, etc., did not think of that curse. His sons, always haughty and cruel, seized and brought away the calf of Jamadagni's home-cow, without the knowledge of Arjuna; Rāma lopped off the arms of Arjuna and brought back the calf; the sons of Arjuna came and slew Jamadagni, in the absence of Rāma, who vowed to free the earth of kṣatriyas, and slaughtered all the sons and grandsons of Arjuna, and thousands of Haihayas, and annihilated all kṣatriyas, and then, filled with compassion, retired into the woods. After some thousands of years, the grandson of Viçvāmītra and son of Raiḍhya, Parāvasu said to Rāma in public: "were not Pratardana, etc., who were assembled at a sacrifice at the time of Yayāti's fall, kṣatriyas by birth; thou art not true of thy vow; through fear of kṣatriya heroes thou hast betaken thyself to the mountains." Rāma once more slew kṣatriyas by hundreds. Those kṣatriyas, however, that he spared, counted by hundreds, multiplied and became mighty monarchs on earth. Rāma once more slaughtered them, not sparing the very children. Some kṣatriya ladies, however, succeeded in protecting their children. Having made the earth destitute of kṣatriyas twenty-one times, Rāma, at the completion of a horse-sacrifice, gave away the earth as a sacrificial present to Kaśyapa. In order to preserve the remnant of the kṣatriyas, Kaśyapa told Rāma to repair to the shores of the southern ocean and not to reside within his dominion. The ocean suddenly created Čūrpāraka for Rāma. Kaśyapa gave the earth to the brahmins and then entered the great forest. Then çādras and vaicyas began to cohabit with the wives of brahmins; unprotected duly by kṣatriyas, the earth quickly sank, and was held by Kaśyapa on his lap (ūru), whence she was called Urvī. For protection's sake she asked Kaśyapa for a king, saying that she had concealed some Haihaya kṣatriyas among women; [further] Paurava (son of Vidāratha), brought up among bears in the Rikshavat mountain; [further] a son of Saudāsa, protected through compassion by Parāçara, and named Sarvakarman (etymology); Çibi's son Gopati, brought up in the forest among kine; Pratardana's son Vata, brought up among calves in a cow-pen; Dadhivāhana's grandson and Diviratha's son, concealed on the banks of Gangā by Gautama; Bṛhadratha, protected by apes (? goldāṅgalaiḥ, cf. BR.; PCR.: wolves) on Gr̥dhrakūṣa; many kṣatriyas belonging to the race of Marutta have been brought up by the ocean; they are living among artisans and goldsmiths; "their fathers and grandfathers have been slain for my sake by Rāma; it is my duty to see that their funeral rites are duly performed." Kaśyapa, seeking out those kṣatriyas, installed them duly as kings in days of yore.

Those kāśtriya races that are now extant are the progeny of those princes.

Rāmopākhyānaparvan ("the episode relating to Rāma", i.e. the subject-matter of the Rāmāyaṇa; it is the 48th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr.). (Cf. Rāmopākhyāna, Rāmāyaṇa.) § 525: As Yuddhiṣṭhira asked Mārkaṇḍeya if he knew any one more unfortunate than he was (III, 273), Mārkaṇḍeya related the story of Rāma Daśarathi: King Aja of Ikṣvaku's race had a son Daśaratha, who had four virtuous sons: Rāma (son of Kausalyā), Lakṣmaṇa and Ṣaṭrughna (sons of Sumitrā), and Bharata (son of Kaikeyī). Sītā, the daughter of the Videha king Janaka, was created by Tvāṣṭr himself to become the wife of Rāma. Prajāpati (Pitāmaha, Svayambhū, the Creator of all the worlds) had a mind-born son Pulastya, who with a cow begat a son Vaiśravaṇa (i.e. Kubera). Leaving his father, Vaiśravaṇa went to his grandfather, and angered at this, his father with half of his own self became born as Viśravaṇa for wreaking vengeance on Vaiśravaṇa. But Pitāmaha, pleased with Vaiśravaṇa, gave him immortality and made him the sovereign of wealth (Dhanaṣa), a lokapāla and friend of Īḍāna, and gave him a son Nalakūbara, and Laṅkā for his capital, guarded by hosts of Rākṣasas, and the vimāna Pushpaka capable of going everywhere, and the kingship of the Yakṣas, etc. (III, 274).—§ 526: The muni Viśravaṇa was greatly enraged against Vaiśravaṇa. Kubera (Naravāhana), the king of the Rākṣasas, always sought to please his father, and, living in Laṅkā, sent three Rākṣasa women (a) skilled in singing and dancing to wait upon him. Pulastya granted them boons: to Pushpotkaṣa two sons: Kumbhakarna and Daśagrīva (= Rāvaṇa); Mālinī bore one son, Vibhishana; Rākā became the mother of the twins Khara and Ārpanakha. Vibhishana surpassed everybody in beauty and was very pious; Daśagrīva was energetic and strong; Kumbhakarna was the most powerful in battle and a master of illusion; Khara was proficient in archery and hostile to brahmins; Ārpanakha troubled the ascetics (siddhaviṣṇakart). Learned in the Vedas, they lived with their father on Gandhamādana. And there they beheld Vaiśravaṇa seated with their father, and seized with jealousy, they gratified Brahmān with severe penances (β), while Khara and Ārpanakha protected and attended on them. After 1,000 years Daśagrīva, cutting off his head (i.e. heads), offered it (i.e. them) in the fire, and Brahmān appeared and made them desist from their austerities, granting them boons (γ) except immortality. Now Daśagrīva defeated Kubera in battle and drove him from Laṅkā; Kubera then, followed by Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, and Kinnaras, went to live on Gandhamādana. Rāvaṇa took from him Pushpaka, upon which Vaiśravaṇa cursed him saying: "This chariot shall never carry thee, but him who will slay thee in battle, and as thou hast insulted thy elder brother thou shalt soon die." Vibhishana followed Kubera, who invested him with the command of the Yakṣas and Rākṣasa hosts. On the other hand, the man-eating Rākṣasas and Piṣācas anointed Daśagrīva as their sovereign. Daśagrīva deprived the gods and Daityas of their valuable possessions, and because he terrified (rāvayām asa, v. 15928) all creatures, he was called Rāvaṇa (III, 275). The Brahmarsis, Siddhas, and Devarsis, with Agni as their spokesman, sought the protection of Brahmān, who said that the four-armed Viṣṇu had already been incarnate for this object, and caused Indra and the gods, Gandharvas, and Dānava to beget strong sons, capable of assuming any form at will, on monkeys and bears; and the Gandharva Dundubhi he caused to be born on earth as the hunchbacked Mantharā, who, instructed by Brahmān, went hither and thither ever engaged in fomenting quarrels (III, 276).—§ 527: Asked by Yuddhiṣṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya related: The sons of Daśaratha were conversant with the Vedas and the Dhanurveda. Rāma equalled Indra and Bṛhaspati. At night, the Pushya being in a lucky conjuncture, Rāma was to be invested as yuvarāja. Mantharā aroused the jealousy of Kaikeyī against Kausalyā, Kaikeyī prevailed upon Daśaratha that Bharata should be anointed and Rāma be in exile in the forest of Daṇḍaka for fourteen years. Rāma was accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā. Daśaratha died. Bharata rebuked Kaikeyī and set off to find Rāma, accompanied by Kausalyā, Sumitrā, Kaikeyī, Ṣaṭrughna, Vasishṭha, Vāmadeva, etc. He saw Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on the mountain Citrakūṣa, but Rāma would adhere to the order of his father. Bharata then ruled in Nandigrāma, keeping before him the shoes of Rāma.—§ 528: Rāvaṇagamaṇa (q.v.).—§ 529: Sītāharaṇa (q.v.).—§ 530: Viśvāvasumokṣhaṇa (q.v.).—§ 531: Having bathed in the lake Pampā, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa on the mountain Rāhyamūka beheld the monkey-king Sugrīva (whom his brother Valin had deprived of his wife Tārā and his kingdom) and his four counsellors, Hanumat (equalling Himavat), etc. Sugrīva showed Rāma a piece of cloth that had been dropped by Sītā. Sugrīva promised to bring back Sītā. Rāma installed Sugrīva as king of all the monkeys and promised to slay Valin. Then they all repaired to Kiṣkindhyā. Valin came out; Tārā (who understood the voice of every creature) told him that it was Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Māinda, Deivida, Hanumat, Jambavat (the king of the bears), and Sugrīva who had come to destroy him. Valin suspected Tārā. Near the mountain Mālyavat he had an encounter with Sugrīva. Hanumat placed a garland round Sugrīva's neck (so that he shone like the mountain Malaya), and Rāma recognized Sugrīva by that sign and killed Valin with an arrow. Sugrīva thus regained Kiṣkindhyā and Tārā. Rāma dwelt on Mālyavat for four months.—§ 532: Sītāsantvāna (q.v.).—§ 533: Sītā-Rāvaṇasaṃvāda (q.v.).—§ 534: Hanumat-pratyāgamana (q.v.).—§ 535: Setubandhana (q.v.).—§ 536: Laṅkāpraveśa (q.v.).—§ 537: Rāma-Rāvaṇayuddha (q.v.).—§ 538: Kumbhakarnarāgaṇagamaṇa (q.v.).—§ 539: Kumbhakarnādivadha (q.v.).—§ 540: Indrajidyuddha (q.v.).—§ 541: Indrajidyadha (q.v.).—§ 542: Rāvaṇavādha (q.v.).—§ 543: Rāmābhishheka (q.v.).—§ 544: Yuddhiṣṭhirācāraṇa (q.v.).

Rshyaçrṅga (B. R°ya°), a muni, son of Vibhāṇḍaka. § 11 (Parvasūgr.): I, 2, 443 (°aya caritram, cf. § 391).—§ 270 (Brahmasabhūv.): II, 11, 440 (in the palace of Brahman).—§ 390d (Tirthayātrāp.): R., the son of Kāçyapa (i.e. Vibhāṇḍaka) born by a hind, caused Indra to rain during a drought in the territory of Lomapāda, who gave him his daughter Çāntā: III, 110, 9991.—§ 391 (do.): III, 110, 9994.—§ 391 (cf. do.). The viprasrshi Vibhāṇḍaka Kāçyapa practising austerities near a great lake saw the Apsaras Urvāçī, whence his semen fell into the water and was lapped up by a hind, that was drinking. That hind was a daughter of the gods (devakanyā). Brahman had transformed her into a hind, and when she had given birth to a muni she would be freed. She now gave birth to a son, who was named Rshyaçrṅga, because there was a horn on his head. He passed his days in the forest, devoted to brahmacarya, and he had never seen any human being except his father. At that time the king of the Aṅgas, Lomapāda, a friend of Daçaratha, had been shunned by the brahmins and was without a purohita, because he had been guilty of falsehood towards a brahman and therefore Indra did not give rain in his territory. At the advice of a wise brahman he did atonement for his sins and appeased the brahmins. Thereafter he assembled his ministers in order to discuss means for bringing R. to his land. According to their counsel a courtesan with a number of women, etc., was sent to R. (III, 110). She had constructed a floating hermitage which she moored at a short distance from Vibhāṇḍaka's hermitage, and then sent her daughter, a courtesan, to Rshyaçrṅga. She refused the fruits, foot-washing, etc., saying that her religious vows consisted in not receiving such things, but implied that she might embrace him. By giving him unsuitable food, garlands, beautiful garments, and drinks, and by playing and clasping him in her arms, she made him overpowered with love, and as she went away under the pretext of performing the agnihotra, he became sad. When Vibhāṇḍaka (b) returned he wondered that R. was not splitting the logs for fuel, etc., and asked who had been there (III, 111). R. said that a religious student (brahmacārin) had come to him; he had a mass of hair (jaṭilāḥ) and a pair of ornaments upon his wrist like his rosary (akṣhamālā); his matted hair (jaṭāḥ) was neatly tied up and adhered to the forehead and was divided in two, etc. He (R.) wished to go to him and see him every day (III, 112). Vibhāṇḍaka declared that it was a Rakṣasa, and in vain spent three days in searching for this one. When Vibhāṇḍaka had gone out to collect fruits the courtesans allured R. to enter the bark, which they unmoored, and in this way they brought him to Lomapāda, who prepared a beautiful forest named Nāvyaçrama ("Floating hermitage") and kept R. in the female apartments. Suddenly rain poured down. Lomapāda gave his daughter Çāntā to R. When Vibhāṇḍaka was going to Campā in order to burn the king, the city, and his whole territory, the king let kine be placed and fields ploughed along the road, and ordered the cowherds to honour Vibhāṇḍaka with hospitality when he was fatigued and hungry, and to say that all this belonged to his son and that they were his slaves. Thus Vibhāṇḍaka was appeased. According to the command of his father R., as soon as a son had been born to him, returned to his father in the wood, and Çāntā followed and obeyed him, as Indrasenā Nārāyaṇī was ever obedient to Mudgala, etc. (III, 113): III, 110, 9999, 10000, 10006, 10007 (origin of the name), 10014, 10018, 10021, 10024 (rshah sutaḥ); III, †10034, (†10035), (†10039), †10041, †10043, †10044, †10045; 112, (†10051); 113, †10075 (munim), †10076, †10080, †10091, †10093.—§ 677 (Mokṣadh.): XII, 235, 8609 (Lomapādaç ca rājarsih Çāntāḥ dattā sutaḥ prabhuh | R°aya vipulāḥ sarvakāmair ayujyata, all. to § 391).—§ 702 (do.): XII, 297b, 10874 (Kāçyapaḥ?  Mhbh. Cf. Sabhākriyā). § 261: Maya said he was a great artist (mahākavi), the Vijayakarma of the Dānavas, and asked Arjuna to tell him what he was to do for him, because he had been rescued by him. Arjuna told him to do something for Kṛṣṇa (lokānāthaḥ Prajāpatiḥ, v. 9), who asked him to build a palace for Yudhisṭhira. Maya was introduced to Yudhisṭhira, and recited the history of the Asura (purāṇa deva caritam), i.e. of Vṛṣaparvan (so Nīl.). Then on an auspicious day, after the initiatory rites, and having gratified thousands of brahmins, he measured out a piece of land 10,000 kishkus square (II, 1).

 —§ 262: Kṛṣṇa departed for Dvārakā (v. Bhagavad- there is a huge mountain named Hiranyacṛīṅga, consisting of jewels. Near this mountain is situated the lake Bindusaras, where King Bhagrattha had dwelt for many years, desiring to behold the Gaṅgā. There the lord of all beings (i.e.

Prajāpati, Nīl.) had performed 100 sacrifices, where, for the sake of embellishment, though not according to rule (dṛṣṭāntataḥ), the sacrificial stakes were made of gems and the altars (çaitiṅgāḥ) of gold. There the 1,000-eyed Çatapati had become perfect (siddhiṃ gataḥ) by sacrifice. There Bhātapati (= Mahādeva, Nīl.) took up his abode after having created all the worlds, and there he dwells, worshipped by thousands of spirits (bhūtaih). There Nara and Nārāyaṇa, Brahmān, Yama, and Sthānu perform their sacrifices at the expiration of 1,000 yugas. There Vāṇdeva has performed sattvas for many years, and placed thousands and tens of thousands of sacrificial stakes adorned with golden garlands and altars of great splendour. There Maya, when the Dānavas wished to perform a sacrifice on the bank of the Bindusaras, had made utensils of gems from the house of Vṛṣaparvan. That wealth, which was guarded by Yakṣas and Rākṣasas, he brought away, and thereof constructed the palace of Yudhisṭhira. A club with which Vṛṣaparvan had slain all foes in battle, and which had been placed in Bindusaras, Maya gave to Bhīmasena; the conch-shell Devadatta, that came from Varuṇa, and was also there, he gave to Arjuna; at its sound all creatures trembled in awe.

 The palace surpassed the Sudharmā of Kṛṣṇa and the palace of Brahmān, and covered an area of 10,000 kishkus square. Eight thousand Rākṣasas, called Kiṅkaras, guarded and supported the palace. In it was a tank, whose lotuses were of dark-coloured gems, etc.; many kings mistook it for solid ground, and fell into it. The palace was constructed in seventeen months (II, 3).—§ 264: Enumeration of rshis

Sagara¹, an ancient king of Ayodhyā. § 6 (Anukram.): I, 1a, 227 (in Sañjaya's enumeration).—§ 267 (Yamasubhāv.): II, 8, 330 (in the palace of Yama).—§ 339 (Indralokābhigamanap.): III, 47, 1897 (Kapilāh . . . yona pūram mahātmanāḥ khaṇamāni Rasātalam | darçanād eva nihatāḥ S°yātumajāh, all. to § 387).—§ 387 (Tīrthayātrāp.): At the request of Yudhiṣṭhira, Lomaça said: King S. of the family of the Iksvākus had no sons. He subdued the Harṇyas and the Tālajaṅghas. His wives were Vasudarbhī and Çaibya. With them he on Kailāsa practised ascetic austerities in order to obtain a son, and practising yoga he succeeded in seeing Īva, who said that owing to the muhūrta at which S. had addressed his prayers to him, one of the wives of S. would have 60,000 sons of exceeding pride, who should perish altogether, and the other wife would have one valorous son, who would perpetuate the race of S. Then Īva disappeared and S. and his wives went home. Vaidarbhi after some time brought forth a gourd and Çaibya a beautiful son. As S. was about to throw away the gourd, a voice from the sky told him to take out the seeds and preserve them in steaming vessels partly filled with clarified butter, as they would become 60,000 sons (III, 106). The rajarshi S. did as he was told, and provided a nurse for every receptacle. When they were born their acts were ruthless, they were able to roam about in the sky and harassed the gods, the Gandharvas, the Rākshasas, and all beings. The gods, etc., went to Brahman, who dismissed them saying that in a short time the sons of S. would be destroyed. When after some time they were protecting S.'s sacrificial horse who roamed over the world, the horse suddenly disappeared when it had come to the waterless sea. Having told S. that the horse had been stolen, they were commanded to search for it, but they did not find it. S. then filled with wrath forbade them to return without the horse. They then began to dig the sea with spades, etc., and killed Asuras, Uragas (snakes), Rākshasas, and other beings by hundreds and thousands. After a long time they dug down to Pātāla in the north-eastern region, and seeing the horse there they ran after it without heeding Kapila ("whom they say is Vāsudeva," v. 8880), who was present there. Kapila then burnt them to ashes. Nārada told it to S., who sent for Aṃṣumat, the son of his son Asamañjas, whom he had abandoned according to his duty and for the good of the citizens: III, 106, 8830, 8831 (Ikshvākūṇaṃ kule jātaḥ), 8841; 107, 8859 (rājā), 8869 (°ātmanjāḥ), 8871 (do.), 8876 (do.), 8882 (°antikam).—§ 388 (Asamañjas): III, 107, 8887, 8888 (Asamañjāḥ . . . S°aya sutah), 8890 (abandoned his son Asamañjas).—§ 389 (Guṅgā-vataraṇa): III, 107, 8895, (8896), 8898, 9905, 9907, 9909, 9911, 9912 (asked by S., Aṃṣumat repaired to Kapila, who granted him the horse and that his grandson should bring the Guṅgā down from heaven. S. made the ocean his son and was succeeded on the throne by Aṃṣumat); 108, 9939 (°ātmanjān; Bhagiratha, the grandson of Aṃṣumat, by the favour of Mahādeva brought down the Guṅgā, that she might besprinkle the bodies of the sons of S.).—§ 478 (Dhruvā-mārop): III, 204, 13609 (purva Kapilah . . . S°ātmanjān, sc. adhat, all. to § 387).—§ 552 (Goharaṇa): IV, 567, 1769 (came from heaven to see the encounter).—§ 565 (Gālavacrita): V, 109, 3796 (vidur yaṃ Kapilam decan yenārtaḥ Sagarātmanjāḥ, all. to § 387).—§ 632b (Shoḍaṇarāj): XII, 29, 1023 (Aikshvākum): Also S. of Ikshvāku's race fell a prey to death. Sixty thousand sons walked behind him. He performed 1,000 horse sacrifices and gave precious gifts to the brahmins (description). Through anger he caused the earth to be excavated, and thus she came to have the ocean on her bosom, for this the ocean has come to be called Sāgara after the name of S.—§ 610 (Rājadh): XII, 57, 2034 (Bāhoḥ putreṇa . . . S°ena . . . Asamañjāḥ . . . tyaktah, all. to § 388).—§ 700 (Mokshadh): XII, 289, 10613 (itihāsam purāṇanam Arishtaneminā proktaṃ S°āyānu-prachate), (10614) (instructed by Arishtanemi).—§ 734 (Ānuçāsanik): XIII, 26, 1838 (putrān S°ayeto bhaṣmākhyān anayad dīcam, sc. Guṅgā, all. to § 389).—§ 761 (do.): XIII, 115d, 5668 (did not eat meat during the month of Kārttika).—§ 770 (do.): XIII, 151, 7130 (Sagaranyātmanjā (C. by error Sā° jo) gena plāvitaḥ tārītās tathā, sc. Bhagiratha, all. to § 389. As stated under Çreṭa, PCR. before this inserts a passage (omitted in both C. and B.), of which the last çloka (mentioning Bhagiratha) ought to be connected with this).—§ 775 (do.): XIII, 186g, 7675 (C. has by error Sā°).—§ 785 (Anugitāp): XIV, 87, 2594 (°adayah, had not performed the horse sacrifice). Sainyaniryāna(m) ("the marching out of the troops"). § 10 (Parvasūgr.): I, 2, 333 (i.e. Sainyaniryānaparvan).

[Sainyaniryānaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the marching out of the troops," the 63rd of the minor parvans of Mbhr.; cf. Sainyaniryāna). § 570: The Pāṇḍavas had seven akṣauhīṇis led by Drupada, etc. (a). Yudhiṣṭhira consulted with his brothers about the election of a generalissimo, who might also withstand Bhishma. Sahadeva, etc., proposed Virāṭa, etc. (β). Kṛṣṇa named Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, who was elected. Then they marched out to Kurukṣetra (description), with Bhīma in the van, etc. (γ). Draupadī with her ladies, etc., remained at Upaplavya. The Kōkaya princes, etc. (δ) marched behind Yudhiṣṭhira, keeping him in their centre. In the rear were Virāṭa, etc. (ε), 40,000 chariots, etc. Anādhṛṣṭi, etc. (ζ) marched surrounding Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. Entering Kurukṣetra, they blew their conches, also Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna; Pāṇḍajanya filled them with joy (V, 152). Yudhiṣṭhira encamped on Kurukṣetra. Kṛṣṇa, etc. (η) each did some special work. At the holy Hiraṇyātī (an excellent tīrtha, with sacred water, without pointed pebbles and mire), Kṛṣṇa caused a mound to be excavated. There were assembled hundreds upon hundreds of skilled mechanics in receipt of regular wages, and surgeons and physicians, etc. Then their allies began to march thither (V, 152). When Kṛṣṇa had departed, Duryodhana urged Karṇa, Duḥśāsana, and Çakuni to make preparations for battle, which was fixed to commence the next morning (I, 153). At the request of Yudhiṣṭhira, Kṛṣṇa related Duryodhana's, etc., project of imprisoning him; "neither Bhishma nor Droṇa said anything on that subject; indeed, all of them follow Duryodhana, except Vidura. . . . War is that which should now take place." Yudhiṣṭhira gave order to array the troops, but then he complained that he should slay his preceptors, etc. Arjuna reminded him of what Kuntī and Vidura had said through Kṛṣṇa, and Kṛṣṇa affirmed it. The Pāṇḍavas and their soldiers passed the night in great happiness (V, 154). After that night had passed away, Duryodhana arranged his eleven akṣauhīṇis (description), under Kṛpa, etc. (θ) (V, 155). Referring to a contest between the brahmins, whom also the vaicyas and the çūdras followed, and the kṣatriyas among the Haihayas (b), Duryodhana urged Bhishma to become their generalissimo. Bhishma said that he did not see upon earth the warrior that was equal to him, except Arjuna; but Arjuna would never openly fight with him; Bhishma said he could, in a trice, destroy the universe with D., As., Rā., and men; but the Pāṇḍavas he could not exterminate; but he would slay every day 10,000; and either Karṇa or Bhishma should fight first. Karṇa declared he would not fight before Bhishma was slain; then he would fight with Arjuna. Then Bhishma was solemnly installed, under a bloody shower, etc. Then they marched out to Kurukṣetra, and Duryodhana and Karṇa caused the camps to be measured out on a level part of the plain (V, 156). When Yudhiṣṭhira heard that Bhishma had been installed in the command of the Kuru army, he summoned his brothers and Vāsudeva, and selected seven leaders for his seven akṣauhīṇis: Drupada, etc. (i) (cf. a!), and above them all Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; and Dhanañjaya (i.e. Arjuna) of curly hair was made the leader of all those leaders; and Kṛṣṇa the leader of Arjuna and driver of his steeds. Halāyudha (i.e. Balarāma), etc. (κ) came there, and Yudhiṣṭhira, etc. (λ) rose from their seats and offered worship to Halāyudha. Halāyudha said that a fierce slaughter was inevitable, that the Pāṇḍavas would certainly win because of the help of Kṛṣṇa, that he had repeatedly tried to prevail upon Kṛṣṇa to remain neuter; that he would himself do; but as he could not be without Kṛṣṇa, he would repair to the tīrthas of the Sarasvatī. Then he set out for his tīrthayātrā (V, 157). About this time there came to the Pāṇḍava camp Bhīshmaka's (c) son Rukmin (d). He entered the camp with an akṣauhīṇi of troops, from desire of doing what was agreeable to Vāsudeva. He offered Arjuna his assistance, if he was afraid. He would slay everyone: Droṇa, etc. (μ). Arjuna, mentioning his exploits against the G., at Khāṇḍava, against the Nirātakavacas and Kālākeyas, at Virāṭa's city, and that he had paid his respects for battle's sake to Rudra, etc. (ν), would not say he was afraid. Rukmin then went to Duryodhana, saying the same words, and was rejected in the same way. Then the Pāṇḍavas again consulted, presided over by Yudhiṣṭhira (V, 158). Dhr̥tarāṣṭra asked Sañjaya to tell him all that had happened in the matter of encamping, and complained that though he understood the defects, he could not withstand Duryodhana. Sañjaya said that he ought not to impute the fault only to Duryodhana: "as to our acts, some say that everything is ordained by God; some that they are the result of free-will; others that they are the result of those of our past lives" (V, 159).

[Sainyodyogaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the preparations before warfare," the 57th of the minor parvans of Mbhr.). § 554: After the nuptials of Abhimanyu the Kuru, etc. (a) next morning assembled in the presence chamber of Virāṭa. Kṛṣṇa spoke about the affairs of the Pāṇḍavas, and proposed to send an ambassador to Duryodhana, etc., in order to induce them to give half the kingdom to Yudhiṣṭhira (V, 1). Baladeva approved of it, and said that the ambassador ought to salute Bhishma, etc. (β), that Yudhiṣṭhira had been wrong in challenging Çakuni, and that Duryodhana only ought to be addressed in a conciliatory tone, that war might be avoided (V, 2). Sātyaki severely blamed Baladeva, and asserted that it was Yudhiṣṭhira who had been challenged in the game at dice, that he could not have declined according to the rules of the Kṣatriya caste, and that Çakuni had won by a trick; the Kauravas had not obeyed Bhishma and Droṇa; they ought to be besought by sharp arrows; they could not withstand Yuyudhāna, etc. (ββ) (V, 3). Drupada approved of what had been said by Baladeva, except that Duryodhana should not be addressed mildly, and they ought also to send messengers to Çalya, etc. (γ) to collect an army; his own purohita ought to be sent to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Duryodhana, Bhishma, and Droṇa (V, 4). Having approved of Drupada's words, Kṛṣṇa set out for Dvārakā, and the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhṛtarāṣṭras began to make preparations for war, and collect troops; and Drupada despatched his purohita to the Kurus (V, 5). Drupada gave instructions to his purohita (cf. Pushya, § 554), who set out for Hastinapura with a following of disciples (V, 6). After Kṛṣṇa, etc. (γγ) had set out for Dvārakā, Arjuna and Duryodhana come thither, while Kṛṣṇa was asleep; Duryodhana sat down at the head of the bed; after him Arjuna came and stood at the back of the bed. And when Kṛṣṇa awoke, he first saw Arjuna. Arjuna chose for his partner Kṛṣṇa himself, who was not to fight; Duryodhana selected for himself Kṛṣṇa's ten crores of Nāḍyana cowherds. Balarāma said he would fight neither for Kuṇṭi's sons nor for Duryodhana. Kṛtavarma gave an akshauhini to Duryodhana. Kṛṣṇa promised to become Arjuna's charioteer; Arjuna came back to Yudhishtira with Kṛṣṇa and the flower of the Daçūrha race (V, 7).—§ 555: Çalya with his sons and troops (description) was advancing in order to join the Pāṇḍavas; but Duryodhana caused fine palaces of entertainment to be constructed at different spots for his reception; Çalya first thought this had been arranged by Yudhishtira, until Duryodhana came forward and showed himself; then he promised Duryodhana to become the leader of his army. Çalya, however, first proceeded to the Pāṇḍavas at Upaplavya, and told them about the matter. He promised Yudhishtira that when he became Karna's charioteer he would act so that Karna might be dispirited; and in order to comfort Yudhishtira he reminded him that Çakra (Indra) had to endure, together with his wife, very great misery (V, 8). At the request of Yudhishtira, Çalya related the ancient story (itihāsam purāṇanam) of the great misery endured by Indra and his queen (v. Indravijaya) (V, 9-17). So Yudhishtira should also regain his kingdom. This story of the victory of Indra, equal to the Veda, should be listened to by a king desirous of victory; he who reads it with a heart full of religious faith is purified from his sins, etc. Çalya repeated his promise to damp the spirits of Karna, and went with his army to Duryodhana (V, 18). Yuyudhāna, etc. (γ) came to Yudhishtira with troops (description). For the Pāṇḍavas there were thus assembled seven *akshauhini*s of troops from various directions. In the same way king Bhagadatta (with an akshauhini crowded with Cinas and Kirātas), etc. (δ) came to the Dhṛtarāṣṭras. And thus Duryodhana had a force which numbered eleven *akshauhini*s, so that there was no room for them in the city of Hastinapura; but the Pañcanada, the whole Kurujāngala, etc. (ε), full of abundant corn and wealth, was entirely overspread with the army of the Kauravas. And this army was beheld by the purohita who had been sent by the Pāṇḍava king to the Kurus (V, 19).

Samçaptakavadha(h) (C. °sa°) ("the slaughter of the Samçaptakas"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 338 (i.e. Samçaptakavadhaparvan).

[Samçaptakavadhaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the slaughter of the Samçaptakas," the 72nd of the minor parvas of the Mūbhr.; cf. Samçaptakavadha). § 591: Droṇa confessed his inability to seize Yudhisṭhira if Arjuna were by. The Trigarta king said that Arjuna had always injured them, and took an oath that either Arjuna or the Trigartas should be slain. This oath was taken by the five brothers Satyarthā, etc., (a) with their 10,000 chariots, and by the Mālava king, etc. (β). Then they summoned Arjuna towards the southern part of the field. Arjuna told Satyajit to guard Yudhisṭhira, and went out against the Trigartas (VII, 17).—§ 592: THE TWELFTH DAY'S BATTLE. The Samçaptakas rejoiced at the prospect of fighting Arjuna, who addressed Kṛṣṇa about this ill-timed joy, and terrified them with the sound of Devadatta, and attacked them. Subāhu & Arjuna; Suçarman, etc. (a) & Arjuna; they fled to Duryodhana; but urged by the Trigarta king, they once more returned to the field with the Nārāyaṇa cowherds (VII, 18). Kṛṣṇa conveyed Arjuna to the Samçaptakas. The Nārāyaṇas & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa); Arjuna blew Devadatta and employed the Tvāṣṭra weapon, that confounded the foes, who began to fight each other; Arjuna crushed the Lalitthas, etc. (β), and with the Vāyavya weapon he dispersed the arrows shot by his foes, and Vāyu blew away crowds of Samçaptakas with their steeds, etc. Meanwhile Droṇa attacked Yudhisṭhira (VII, 19). Droṇa had arrayed his troops in the shape of a garuḍa: Droṇa in the mouth; Duryodhana and his brothers = the head; Kṛtāarman and Kṛpa = the two eyes. Bhūtaçarman, etc. (γ), in its neck; Bhūriçravas, etc. (δ), in the right wing; Vinda, etc. (ε), in the left wing before Açratthāman; in the back the Kāliṅgas, etc. (ζ); in the tail Karna with his sons, etc.; Jayadratha, etc. (η), in the bosom; in the midst the Prāgyjyotiṣa king. Yudhisṭhira disposed his troops in the shape of a semicircle. Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Droṇa + Durmukha Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Droṇa dispersed Yudhisṭhira's host (VII, 20). Droṇa & Yudhisṭhira + Satyajit + Vṛka; Satyajit was slain by Droṇa; Yudhisṭhira fled. The Pāñdavas fled away in all directions (VII, 21). Duryodhana addressed Karna in joy, beholding the Pāñcālas, etc. (ν), broken by Droṇa, and Bhīmasena abandoned by the Pāñdavas and the Srñjayas. Karna said that Bhīmasena, followed by Sātyaki, etc. (ξ), would never leave the fight; Duryodhana proceeded to Droṇa's chariot, where a deafening noise was heard of Pāṇḍava warriors returning to the fight (VII, 22). At the request of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Sanjaya described the steeds of Bhīmasena, etc. (o), especially mentioning Bṛhanta (b); the standards of Droṇa, etc. (π), and the bows of Yudhisṭhira, etc. (ρ) (VII, 23). The despondency of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, mentioning Bhīma, etc. (σ) (VII, 24). When the Pāṇḍavas returned to fight and attacked Droṇa, the Kurus were afraid. Duryodhana urged his troops against them. Durmaharāja Dhārtarāṣṭra & Bhīma; Kṛtavarman & Yuyudhāna; the Sindhu king & Kaṭavarman; Subāhu & Yuyutsu, who cut off the two arms of Subāhu; Chālyā & Yudhisṭhira; Bāhlīka & Drupada; Vinda and Anurinda & Virāṭa; that encounter between the Matayas and the Kekayas resembled that between D. and As. in days of old; Bhūtakarman Sabhāpati & Nakula's son Chātānika; Bhūtakarman was slain by Chātānika; Tarīmṇatī & Sutasoma; Bhīmaratha (Dhārtarāṣṭra) slew Chātra; Citra-sena's son & Chrutakarman; Pratirindhya & Acratthāman; the son of Duhśāsana & Chrutakīrti (the son of Arjuna by Drupadi); Lakshmaṇa (son of Duryodhana) & Pañcaccāhan; Vikarṇa (Dhārtarāṣṭra) & Chikhaṇḍin; Angada & Uttamanyu; Durmukha & Puruṣit; Karṇa & the five Kekaya brothers; Durjaya + Jaya + Fijaya (Dhārtarāṣṭra) & Nila + the Kāci king + Jayatsena; Kohemudhūrti + Bṛhanta & Sātyaki; the Cedi king & Ambashṭha; Kṛpa & Vardhakshemi; Soma-datta's son & Manimat; Vṛshasena (the son of Karṇa) & Pāṇḍya; Ghaṭotkaca & Alambusha VII, 25; Duryodhana & Bhīmasena; the Anga king (Mleccha king) & do.; Bhīma slew him, and his divisions fled; the Prāgyyotiṣa king (upon his elephant Supratika) & Bhīma (who knew the aṅgalikāredha); Bhīma escaped from the elephant, but was supposed to have been slain; Yudhisṭhira (+ the Pāñcālas) & Bhagadatta (upon Supratika); the Daśarṇa king (upon his elephant) & Bhagadatta; Bhagadatta & Yuyudhāna; Bhagadatta destroyed the Pāṇḍava troops; Bhīma & Bhagadatta, whose elephant frightened Bhīma's steeds, that bore Bhīma away; Ruciparvan (Kṛti-sutah) & Bhagadatta, who slew him; Abhimanyu, etc. (τ), & Bhagadatta's elephant; Yuyutsu had his steeds and charioteer trod down and fled; Duryodhana (?) & Abhimanyu; Arjuna, etc. (v) & Bhagadatta; the Pāṇḍava troops fled (VII, 26). Urged by Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa began to proceed against Bhagadatta; the Samcāptakas (10,000 Triyantas and 4,000 Nārāyaṇāḥ (Vāsudevasyāṇṇagāḥ)) challenged Arjuna, and he encountered them, shot the Brahma weapon, defeated and slew them, and then turned against Bhagadatta (VII, 27); but as Suçarman with his brothers followed him from behind, he again attacked Suçarman, and then again Bhagadatta (VII, 28); Bhagadatta, at last, by means of mantras changed his hook into the Vaiṣṇava weapon, which, received by Kṛṣṇa on his breast, became a garland. As Arjuna taxed Kṛṣṇa for his taking part in the battle, Kṛṣṇa related the history of the Vaiṣṇavāstra (c). "The great Asura has now been divested of that supreme weapon; now slay Bhagadatta, that enemy of the gods, even as I formerly for the benefit of the worlds slew the Asura Nalaka." Arjuna then slew both Bhagadatta (who was ever the favourite and friend of Indra, v. 1302), and the elephant (VII, 29). Then Arjuna slew the two brothers Vṛṣaṅka and Acala (sons of the Gāndhāra king Subala). Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons attacked Arjuna, and Çakuni created illusions in order to confound him and Kṛṣṇa: clubs, etc., and asses, etc., which Arjuna slew with celestial weapons; then darkness, whence proceeded harsh voices; this Arjuna dispelled with the weapon Jyotiṣhka; then waves of water, dried up with the Āditya weapon; Çakuni fled. Arjuna slaughtered the Kuru army: one stream proceeded towards Droṇa, one towards Duryodhana; a fierce battle took place on the southern side between Arjuna and the Kurus. The various divisions of Yudhisṭhira's force smote the foe on every part of the field (VII, 30). Droṇa + the Kurus & Yudhisṭhira, etc. (φ), + the Pāṇḍavas; Nila & Acratthāman, who slew him; the Pāṇḍavas regretted that Arjuna was engaged in the southern part of the field in slaughtering the Samcāptakas and the Nārāyaṇa force (VII, 31). Bhīmasena & Bāhlīka + Karṇa; Droṇa, etc. (χ) & Bhīma; Yudhisṭhira despatched Nakula, etc. (ψ), to the rescue of Bhīma; Bhīma, etc., & Droṇa; the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ω) & Droṇa, etc. (aa). Arjuna, having slain the Samcāptakas, & Droṇa + the Kurus + Arjuna, who employed the Agneya weapon; Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (ββ) & Karṇa; Arjuna slew three of Karṇa's brothers (γγ); Bhīma slew fifteen of Karṇa's combatants; Dhṛṣṭadyumna slew Candrarman, etc. (δδ); Duryodhana, etc. (εε) & Sātyaki, rescuing Karṇa; Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (ζζ) protected Sātyaki. At sunset the armies retired (VII, 32).

[Samvar(t)ta-Maruttiya] ("the tale of Samvarta and Marutta"): § 778b (Açvamedh.). Vyāsa said: In the Kṛta age Manu was the ruler; > Prasandhi > Kshupa > Ikshvāku > Vim̐sa (the model bowman, the eldest of 100 brothers, all kings) > Vim̐sa > Khanineta (c) > Suvarcas (d) Karandhama > Avikshit (e) Karandhama > Marutta (who surpassed his father, had the strength of 10,000 elephants, and was equal to Fishnu). Desirous of performing a sacrifice, Marutta, coming to Meru, on the northern side of Himavat, caused thousands of gold vessels to be forged; there on a huge golden hill he performed the rites along with other princes (XIV, 4). Asked by Yudhishtira, Vyāsa said: As the offspring of Prajāpati Dakṣa, D. and As., challenged each other, so did Angiras' sons Brhaspati and Samvarta; troubled by his elder brother Samvarta went naked to the woods. Indra, having vanquished the As., appointed Bṛh. as his priest. Formerly (read pūrvam with B.) Angiras was the family priest of king Karandhama (see d); so also of his son Avikshit (equal to Yayāti). His son Marutta used to defy Indra, and Indra used to defy Marutta, but could not prevail over him. Then Indra took the promise from Bṛh. that he would not perform priestly offices for Marutta ("thou hast destroyed Namuci, Viçvarāpa, and Bala," said Bṛh.). Vaiçampāyana said: Then Indra was cured for his envy and went home (XIV, 5). Vyāsa said: The ancient tale of the discourse between Bṛh. and Marutta is cited in this connection. Marutta in vain tried to persuade Bṛh. to officiate at his sacrifice (which Bṛh. had himself formerly proposed); D. r. (M. r.) Nārada told him to apply to Samvarta, who now, desirous of seeing Maheçvara, wandered about in Vāṇasī in the garb of a madman; "having reached the gate of that city, thou must place a dead body somewhere near it, and the man who shall turn away on seeing the corpse, do thou know that man to be Samvarta; if he should ask thee to follow me," said Nārada, "thou mayst even tell him without hesitation that I have ascended the pyre." Vyāsa said: "By acting thus, Marutta found Samvarta in a lonely place; Samvarta covered him with mud and ashes and phlegm and spittle. At last he sat down under a nyagrodha tree" (XIV, 6). Marutta told him the matter (also that Nārada had mounted the pyre); Samvarta then, as a lunatic, scolding Marutta repeatedly with harsh words, told him to go to Bṛh. first (as his elder brother), and taking Bṛh.'s permission he might come back. As Marutta said that he had already been repulsed by Bṛh., and that he now desired to sacrifice even with all his goods in order to outstrip Indra, Samvarta consented, if Marutta would agree to do all that Samvarta would ask him to do, as Bṛh. and Indra were certain to do all they could to injure Marutta. Marutta took an oath to this. Samvarta said that Marutta would surpass Indra, D., and G.; he himself had no desire for wealth, but would only do what was disagreeable to Indra and Bṛh. (XIV, 7). Samvarta said: There is a peak Muñjavat (f) on the Himalaya, where Çiva is constantly engaged in austerities; go thither and appease Çiva, whose names are Çarva, etc. (a); then thou shalt acquire that gold. Marutta acted accordingly; Bṛh. became sick from envy; Indra with D. came (XIV, 8) and was told about the matter ("prosperity of a rival is always painful, and for this reason thou with D. persecutest As. and kills them"). He despatched Agni (g) to Marutta, asking him to let Bṛh. officiate as his priest instead of Samvarta, promising him the greatest rewards ("such as the highest regions created by Prajāpati and even the whole kingdom of the gods"); Samvarta threatened to burn Agni with his fearful eye, if he ever came again on such an errand. Agni was frightened and returned to Indra and Bṛh. and said that Marutta had refused and did not care for his promises. Indra asked Agni to return to Marutta, and threatened him with Indra's thunderbolt if he did not obey; Agni, afraid of Samvarta, suggested that the G. king should go; Indra said that nobody could burn Agni; Agni asked why then Vṛtra could deprive Indra of the sovereignty of Heaven; Indra, mentioning his victories over the Kālakeyas, Dā., and Prahlāda, said that it was because he did not accept soma from a foe, nor strike the weak with his thunderbolt; Agni reminded him of Cyavana at Çaryāti's sacrifice and the creation of Mada (description): "the might of brahmins is greater than that of kshatriyas" (XIV, 9). Then Indra sent G. Dhṛtarāṣṭra on the same errand, but in vain. Vyāsa said: As the clouds indicated that Indra must be near, Marutta repaired to Samvarta, who comforted him, saying that Agni would protect him, and that he would himself dispel the thunder by the winds, and granted him the boon that Indra should come in person to his sacrifice and accept the oblations offered to him, and so should all the gods. And so it happened by the power of Samvarta's incantations. Requested by Samvarta, Indra himself gave directions to all the gods to erect a hall of assembly: 1,000 well-furnished rooms with a durable staircase for the ascent of G. and Aps., and to furnish that portion of the sacrificial ground reserved for the dance of Aps., like unto the palace of Indra in heaven; Indra said that Marutta's ancestors and the gods had been highly pleased, and told him to offer a red bull to Agni, and a blue bull with a variegated skin to V.-D. Then Indra and the gods returned home. Marutta placed heaps of gold on various spots and distributed immense wealth to the brahmins.

Sañjayayāna(m) ("the mission of Sañjaya"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 329 (°akhyam parva, i.e. Sañjayayānaparvan).

[Sañjayayānaparvan(°va)] ("the section relating to the mission of Sañjaya," the 58th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Sañjayayāna). § 556: Drupada's purohita was honoured by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Bhīṣma, and Vidura. He mentioned the eternal duties of kings; the Pāṇḍavas had not obtained their share of the paternal wealth; the murderous contrivances of the Dhṛtarāṣṭras; the deceitful game; the indignities in the council-hall; the exile for thirteen years; the Pāṇḍavas desired nothing but a peaceful settlement; the Pāṇḍavas were more powerful; men like Sātyaki, Bhīmasena, and the twins were equal in might to 1,000 akṣauhīnī; Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa nobody could fight (V, 20). Bhīṣma approved of his speech; but Karna wrathfully interrupted him. Dhṛtarāṣṭra pacified Bhīṣma, rebuked Karna, sent Drupada's purohita back to the Pāṇḍavas, and summoned Saṁjaya to the council-hall (V, 21). Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave instructions to Saṁjaya, praising the Pāṇḍavas (a) and Kṛṣṇa and some of their adherents (β), mentioning the killing of Çiçupāla (b), blaming Duryodhana and Karna, and ordered him to go to Upaplavya to salute them and the five sons of Draupadī, and tell them that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was desirous of peace with the Pāṇḍavas (V, 22). Saṁjaya came to Upaplavya and saluted Yudhishtira and enquired about Bhīmasena, etc. (γ). Yudhishtira inquired about Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (δ), and mentioned the prowess of Arjuna (c), Sahadewa (d), Nakula (e), and the Ghoshayātrā (V, 23). Saṁjaya delivered his message and answered Yudhishtira's questions (V, 24). In the presence of the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (e), Saṁjaya greeted Yudhishtira, etc. (ζ), and recommended peace, "for what, in sooth, is life after having killed all your kinsfolk?" ; he mentioned Kṛṣṇa, etc. (η) on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and Drona, etc. (θ), on the side of the Kauravas (V, 25). Yudhishtira said that peace was preferable to war, but complained that Duryodhana had disregarded the words of Vidura, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra had been desirous solely of satisfying his sons; that Duryodhana's counsellors were now Duhçāsana, Çakuni, and Karna. He compared Arjuna, Bhīma, Nakula, and Sahadewa with Karna and Duryodhana. He claimed Indraprastha for his kingdom (V, 26). Saṁjaya declared that if, without war, the Kurus would not yield his share to Yudhishtira, then it would be far better for him to live upon alms in the kingdom of the Andhakas and the Yṣhnīs than to obtain sovereignty by war (V, 27). Yudhishtira said that virtue and vice, which are both eternal and absolute, exchange their aspects during seasons of distress; he would not seek even what belongs to Prajāpati, or heaven, or Brahmaloka (Prājāpatyaṁ tridivam Brahmalokeyam) by unrighteous means; but he would be guided by Kṛṣṇa, as did Satyaki, etc. (i); Kṛṣṇa was the great judge of the propriety or otherwise of all acts (V, 28). Kṛṣṇa said he wished prosperity for both the Pāṇḍavas and Dhṛtarāṣṭra; therefore he desired peace; but when Dhṛtarāṣṭra and his sons were so covetous, war was inevitable; "some say that work should be shunned and that salvation is attainable by knowledge; but the brahmins know this, that though one may have a knowledge of eatable things, yet the hunger will not be appeased unless one actually eats; such branches of knowledge as are of use in doing works bear fruit, but not the other ones. In the other world it is by virtue of work that the gods, etc. (κ) flourish. Yudhishtira is constantly engaged in the study of the Veda; he is bent on the horse-sacrifice and the rājasūya; he rides horses and elephants, etc.; if the Pāṇḍavas could see a course of action not involving the slaughter of the sons of Kuru, they would adopt it. But we must take into consideration the division into four castes and the respective duties allotted to each (specification). War and weapons were invented by Indra for putting the Dasyus to death." Kṛṣṇa alluded to the game and the role of Çakuni there, to the indignities undergone by Kṛṣṇa from Duhçāsana and Karna, while the Kurus with Bhīṣma at their head did not interfere, and only Vidura took her part; and that Duhçāsana had called the Pāṇḍavas eunuchs at their departure. He would go in person to the Kurus. He compared the evil passions of Duryodhana, etc. (λ), with the righteousness of Yudhishtira, etc. (μ). "King Dhṛtarāṣṭra with his sons constitute a forest, while the Pāṇḍavas are its tigers; do not cut down the forest with its tigers, and let not the tigers be driven away from the forest; the tiger out of the wood is easily slain; the wood also that is without a tiger is easily cut down." Similarly the Dhṛtarāṣṭras are as creepers, the Pāṇḍavas are Çala-trees, and the creepers cannot dispense with a large tree round which it can twine (V, 29). Saṁjaya then bade farewell to Yudhishtira, etc. (ν). Yudhishtira spoke approvingly of Saṁjaya's agreeable speech and excellent conduct as an ambassador, and compared him to Vidura, and declared him to be as dear to them as Dhananjaya (i.e. Arjuna). He recommended the brahmins to him, and told him to salute Drona, etc. (ξ), and the aged, middle-aged, and young ladies, "the daughters of our house," and the maidservants and manservants, and the many humpbacked and lame ones among them, and those that were defective in limb, or imbecile, and the dwarfs to whom Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave food and raiment from motives of humanity, the blind, the aged, the many that had the use only of their hands, being destitute of legs, the masterless and weak, those that vainly strived to earn a living, the ignorant, in fact, all those that were in pitiable circumstances, all the ambassadors arrived from all sides, etc. He concluded with this message to Duryodhana: "give me back my own Indraprastha (Çakrapurīm), or fight with me" (V, 30). Yudhishtira said that the Creator (Dhātṛ) gives and takes according to his will. He told Saṁjaya especially to salute Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Bhīṣma, and Vidura, and recommend the Pāṇḍavas to them, that they might counsel peace; and to say to Duryodhana that the Pāṇḍavas were willing to forgive his insults to Draupadī (Kṛṣṇā) and Duhçāsana's dragging her, disregarding Kuntī; but they must have their proper share of the kingdom; "give us even a single province of the empire; give us even Kuçasthala (B. Avi°), Vṛkasthala, Makundī, Vāraṇasī, and in the fifth place any other village that thou likest; even this will end the quarrel." He said that to see the Kurus and the Pāṇḍavas live happily united was what he desired (V, 31). Having returned to Hāstinapura, Saṁjaya addressed Dhṛtarāṣṭra at night; he praised Yudhishtira, "who shines in his natural perfection, leaving his load of sins to be borne by thee," while Dhṛtarāṣṭra's acts were contrary to both religion and profit. In delivering the message from Yudhishtira he did not mention the alternative of giving them the five villages. He alluded to Arjuna's ascending to the very heavens and being honoured there. King Bali, not finding a primary cause (pāraṇi), regarded time (kālāḥ) to be the cause of everything. "To-morrow morning the Kurus, assembled together in the council-hall, will hear the words of Ajātaçatru (i.e. Yudhishtira)" (V, 32).

Whithersoever the Sarasvatī was summoned, thither she made her appearance. Her seven forms are Suprabhā, etc. (a). I) Pitāmaha [i.e. Brahmān] was once performing a sacrifice at Pushkara; whatever he thought of, immediately appeared, the Gandharvas sung, the Apsarases danced. The ṛshis missed Sarasvatī, Brahmān thought of her and she appeared there at Pushkara under the name of Suprabhā. II) At Naimisha many munis were assembled, performing sacrifices and talking about the Vedas, they thought of Sarasvatī, who made her appearance and came to be called Kāñcanākṣī. III) Similarly she came to the sacrifice of Gaya in the country of the Gayas (Gayashu), where she flowed from the slopes of Himavat and was called Viśālā. IV) At the sacrifice of Auddalaki in the northern part of Kosala (uttare Kośalabhūge), having been previously thought of by Uddalaka when sacrificing, she was mentally called Manorama by the ṛṣhis. V) At Kuru's sacrifice at Kurukṣetra, she was summoned by Vasishtha, and named Oghavati. VI) At Dakṣa's sacrifice at Gāṅgādvāra she appeared under the name of Surenu (see the note of PCR. pag. 154). VII) At Brahmān's sacrifice on the Himavat, as Vimalodā. All these seven forms then came and mingled together in the tīrtha, which from this is known by the name of Saptasārasvatā. austerities afflicted Indra with fear. As he could not be turned away even by diverse kinds of rewards, Indra despatched to him the Apsaras Alambushā on the banks of the Sarasvatī. At the sight of her his seed fell into the Sarasvatī, the river held it in her womb and brought forth a son whom she brought to the ṛṣhis, who granted her a boon, saying that the Viśvadevas, the ṛṣhis, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarases would henceforth derive great happiness when oblations of her water were presented to them, and praised her as having sprung from the lake of Brahmān, etc., and said that the child should be named S., and during a drought of twelve years teach the Vedas to many brahmins, and that she should become the foremost of all sacred rivers. The river took the child with her. Meanwhile, on the occasion of a war between the gods and the Dānavas, Indra wandered through the three worlds in search of weapons, but failed to find such weapons as were fit to slay the enemies of the gods, until Dadhīca (hh), solicited by the gods, gave up his life (and obtained many regions of inexhaustible merit) and Indra from his bones caused many kinds of weapons (thunderbolts, discs, maces, clubs, and bludgeons) to be made. With the thunderbolt born of Brāhma energy and inspired with mantras, Indra made a loud noise when he hurled it and slew ninety-nine heroes among the Dāityas. After a long time a twelve years' drought occurred, and the ṛṣhis fled away; only S. was retained by the Sarasvatī, who supplied him with food, giving him large fishes, and he offered oblations to the ṛṣhis and the gods. While wandering with famished stomachs, the ṛṣhis had lost the knowledge of the Vedas and solicited one another to lecture on the Vedas. [Satyavatilābhopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating how Čāntanu got Satyavati"). § 165 (cf. Āpavop.): Description of Čāntanu, the prince anointed him as "King of Kings" (rājardjya, v. 3974); he ruled the earth from Hastinapura, the town (puṭabhedana) of the Kurus (v. 3978); there was no killing of deer, boars, etc., under his reign (cf. § 162!) except for the sacrifices to the gods, ṛshis, and pitṛs. For thirty-six years he, without enjoying the love of women, roamed about in the woods, and his son, Gāṅgeya Devavrata, the Vasu, was equal to him. One day, when pursuing a deer he had wounded along the banks of the Gāṅgā, he saw a youth who, with a heavenly weapon, checked the flow of the Gāṅgā. It was his son who, knowing him, but not known by him, and clouding his perception by illusion (māyā), suddenly disappeared. On Čāntanu's prayer, Gāṅgā appeared holding the boy, and having told him that he was his son, and that he had studied all the Vedas and their Āṅgas with Vasiṣṭha and knew all śāstras that were known by Ucānas and Bṛhaspati (adored by the gods and Asuras), and by the ṛshi Rāma Jāmadagnya, and also the rājadharmas, she let him take him to his capital, where he was installed as heir-apparent. After four years Čāntanu met with Satyavati in the wood on the banks of Yamunā, and demanded her hand from her father, the king of the fishermen (dācarāja), who would not consent unless Čāntanu would promise that his son by Satyavati should become his successor on the throne. Čāntanu would not grant the boon, but returned to Hastinapura and passed his time in sorrow until Devavrata, having learned from the old minister the cause of his grief, by declaring that he would adopt the vow of brahmacharya (including celibacy), prevailed upon the fisherman (who had formerly rejected the Devārshi Asita, because Parācara had pointed out to him Čāntanu as a suitable husband for her), that he gave Satyavati to Čāntanu, while the gods and ṛshis showered flowers upon Devavrata, calling him Bhīshma. Bhīshma then took the maiden to Hastinapura on his chariot, and Čāntanu bestowed upon him the boon of death at choice (I, 100). (For continuation v. Citrāṅgadop.)

Saubhavadhākhyāna ("the story of the destruction of Saubha"). § 71 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 428 (i.e. Saubhavadhōpākhyāna).

[Saubhavadhōpākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to the destruction of Saubha"; cf. Saubhavadhākhyāna). § 319 (cf. Arjunabh.). Kṛṣṇa related: When Çiçupāla, the son of Damaghosha, had been slain, his brother, the Mārttikātata-king Çālva, in order to avenge him, came to Drārakā in the Saubha, who moved at will and slew many of the Vṛṣṇis, and sought for Kṛṣṇa desiring to kill him. Kṛṣṇa was in Indraprastha at the rājasūya of Yudhishtira, and when he learnt this on returning home, he set out to slay him, and found him in an island in the ocean (see Nīl. and PCR.; BR. "a bay"), and blowing his conch Pāñcajanya, slew numerous Dānavas. Then, as soon as he heard of the game at dice, he had come to the Pāṇḍavas (III, 14)—§ 320. Copious description of the combats with Çālva: When Çālva attacked Drārakā it was well furnished and strongly fortified (description of fortifications and measures taken to defend the city by Ugrasena, Uddhara, etc.) and defended by Gada, Çāmba, etc. (III, 15). Cārudeśha (son of Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī), Çāmba (son of Kṛṣṇa and Jāmbavati), and Pradyumna (son of Kṛṣṇa and Rukmiṇī) rushed out against him. They on both sides fought by means of śmāyā. Çāmba put Kāshemaryddhi, the commander of Çālva's troops, to flight by a shower of arrows, and slew a Daitya named Vegarat with his mace. Cārudeśha slew the Dānava Vivindhya with a consecrated arrow. Then Çālva, riding on Saubha, encountered Pradyumna (III, 16). Riding on his chariot with a gaping makara in its standard, Pradyumna with showers of arrows slew the Dānavas and pierced the heart of Çālva so that he fell in a swoon, but he rose again and wounded Pradyumna about his throat so that he became senseless (III, 17). Pradyumna's charioteer Dāruki, a sūta, carried him off the field by the help of his fleet steeds, but when Pradyumna had regained his senses, he ordered him to turn the chariot, reminding him of the customs of the Vṛṣṇis in battle, and saying that he had restrained Kṛtavarma, the son of Ilṛdika, from sallying out, as he would himself resist Çālva (III, 18). As Çālva used his māyā of the Auras, Pradyumna shot him down with the Brahmāstra, and was about to aim another arrow at him, capable of killing any person, when all the hosts of the gods, with Indra and Dhanecvara (i.e. Kubera), sent Nārada and Çrasana (i.e. the Wind), who ordered him to desist as the creator (Dhātṛ) had destined Kṛṣṇa, the son of Devaki, to slay him. Çālva then mounted Saubha and went away through the skies leaving Drārakā (III, 19). When Çālva had left Drārakā, Kṛṣṇa returned from the rājasūya, and found Drārakā deprived of its splendour, etc.

He learnt from Ilṛdikya (i.e. Kṛtavarma) about the invasion of Çālva, committed the city to the charge of king Āhuka and Ānakadundubhi (i.e. Vasudeva), etc., bowed to Bhava (i.e. Çiva), and set out on his chariot yoked with Çaibya and Sugriva and with Dāruka for his charioteer, blowing the Pāñcajanya, till he arrived at Mārttikārata, and pursued Çālva (Daiteyāpasadaḥ, v. 796), who, staying in Saubha, remained in the sky above the midst of the ocean a kroça off, so that Kṛṣṇa's soldiers could not see it, but were obliged to stand as mere spectators. After a long battle with arrows, in which Kṛṣṇa killed numerous Dānavas, they took to flight by means of illusion, whirling maces, ploughshares, etc., and then mountain peaks. As none could ascertain whether it was day or night, or distinguish the points of the horizon, Kṛṣṇa, becoming bewildered, made use of the Prajñāstra, by which he regained light (III, 20). Dāruka was covered all over with shafts. Then a messenger of Āhuka came from Drārakā, saying that Çālva had come to Drārakā and had slain Vasudeva. Kṛṣṇa thought that then Sātyaki, Baladera, Pradyumna, Cārudeśha, Çāmba, etc., must necessarily have been killed first. Now he saw Vasudeva falling from Saubha, and swooned away; but, as he, after regaining consciousness, saw neither Saubha, nor Çālva, nor Vasudeva, he concluded that it was illusion (III, 21). Though Kṛṣṇa could not see Saubha, which had vanished through illusion, he discharged many arrows from the Çārīga. The Dānavas set up a loud howl, and when Kṛṣṇa, making use of a weapon that pierced the foe following the sound, killed them at one place, the yell ceased at that place and started from another quarter. Then Saubha reappeared at Prāgyotisha. Kṛṣṇa, Dāruka, and the horses were covered by torrents of rocks that concealed them, and the Vṛṣṇis fled in all directions. Kṛṣṇa then destroyed the crags with Indra's thunderbolt, Dāruka pointed at Çālva and exhorted Kṛṣṇa to slay him. Kṛṣṇa made use of his Āgneya weapon and hurled his discus Sudarçana (b) against the city of Saubha, that fell cut in twain like the city of Tripura by the shafts of Maheçvara. Then the discus came back into his hands and was hurled against Çālva and cut him in twain. The remaining Dānavas fled in fear. Kṛṣṇa returned to the Ānarttas. It was for this reason that he could not come to Māstīnapura and prevent the gambling.—§ 321: Then Kṛṣṇa took leave of Yudhishtira, etc., and set out for Drārakā in his chariot yoked with Çaibya and Sugriva, taking with him Subhadra and Abhimanyu. Then Dhṛṣṭadyumna set out for his own city, taking with him the Draupadeyas. And the Cedi king, Dhṛṣṭaketu (Çiçupāla's son, Nīl.), set out for his beautiful city of Çuktimati, taking with him his sister [Kareṇumatī, the wife of Nakula; Nīl., v. I, 3831]. Also the Kaīkeyas (R. Kekayāḥ; Sahadevacyālāḥ, Nīl.) went away. But the brahmins, raçyās, and inhabitants of the country would not leave the Pāṇḍavas. Yudhishtira in due time ordered his men to make the chariots ready (III, 22). [Saugandhikāharanāṃ] ("the bringing of the fragrant lotuses"; cf. Tīrthayātrāp.). § 431: When Bhīma was embraced by Hanumat his fatigue went off. Hanumat asked him not to tell anyone that he dwelt there; this was the time of the arrival of the gods and of the Gandharvas (cf. v. 11220); he declared himself willing if Bhīma might wish it to go to Hastinapura and slay the Dhātaraśṭras, etc., and dive into the army of his foes, giving leonine roars and remaining on the flagstaff of Arjuna's chariot. Then Hanumat vanished (III, 151).—§ 432: Description of the proceeding of Bhīma along the Gandhamādana till he found the lotuses (III, 152). Description of the lotus-lake, near Kailāsa, guarded by hundreds of thousands of Rākshasas (called Krodhavaṇṇas), sprung from a cascade near the abode of Kubera, the sporting place of Kubera, frequented by Gandharvas, Apsarases, gods, divine rishis, Yakshas, Kimpuru-shas, Rākshasas, and Kinnaras. Bhīma drank of the water (III, 153). The Krodhavaṇṇas ordered Bhīma to ask the permission of Kubera before he entered the lake; but Bhīma plunged into the water, and as the Rākshasas attacked him, he slew 100 of them with his mace, inlaid with golden plates, and then drank of the water, by which his strength was fully restored, and gathered saugandhika-lotuses, while the Krodhavaṇṇas fled through the sky to the peaks of Kailāsa and gave account to Kubera, who said: "Let Bhīma take as many lotuses as he likes." The Rākshasas then returned to Bhīma (III, 154).—§ 433: As there arose a violent wind with gravel, meteors, thunder, darkness, earthquake, dust, and evil omens, Yudhishtira, having learned from Kṛṣṇa the depart of Bhīma, and alleging that Bhīma had not formerly done any wrong to the Siddhas (siddhānām brahma-vādinām, v. 11415), resolved to find out Bhīma and let Ghaṭotkaca carry Kṛṣṇa, while other Rākshasas carried the Pāṇḍavas and the brahmins, and so they proceeded with Lomaṣa to the lake, where the slaughtered Yakshas were lying, and Yudhishtira entreated Bhīma never again to offend the gods; the Pāṇḍavas began to sport in the lake, and the murders (i.e. the Rākshasas), with rocks for weapons, bowed down in humility. There they dwelt for a short time on the slopes of Gandhamādana, expecting Arjuna (III, 155).—§ 434: One day when Yudhishtira, remembering the tīrthas, rivers (Ilā, etc.), etc., that they had visited, consulted with Bhīma how they should repair to the abode of Vaiṣṇava (b), a voice from the sky said that they must first return to Badarī and thence to the hermitage of Vṛṣhapaṇvan (c) and that of Ārṣṭishena. There came a shower of blossoms. According to the counsel of Dhaumya, they all returned to the hermitage of Nara and Narāyaṇa (III, 156).

[Sauptikaparvan(°va)] ("the section including the nightly attack": (a) the 10th of the greater parvas of Mbhhr., including the 83rd and the 84th of the minor parvas; (b) the 83rd of the minor parvas; cf. Sauptika). § 616: Açvatthāman, etc. proceeded towards the south. At the hour of sunset they reached a spot near the encampment. Hearing the shouts in the Pāṇḍava camp, they proceeded farther and reached a dense forest. Dhātaraśṭra interrupted Sañjaya by expressing his grief for Duryodhana, and then inquired about the acts of the three survivors (a). Sañjaya continued: Açvatthāman, etc., laid themselves down for rest under a huge banyan; Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma fell asleep;

Açvatthāman was kept awake by wrath and the desire of vengeance. He saw a fierce owl coming to that banyan and slaying a large number of crows roosting on its branches; at this sight he formed the resolution of slaying the Pāṇḍava army while buried in sleep; he roused Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma, unfolded his project before them, and asked for their advice (X, 1); Kṛpa dissuaded him from executing his wicked design; "Let us repair to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, and Vidura, and ask them as to what we should do" (X, 2); Açvatthāman tried to refute Kṛpa's arguments (β) (X, 3). Kṛpa promised to aid Açvatthāman if the latter would fight the foe the next morning during daylight (γ); Açvatthāman's answer: he would not desist (δ) (X, 4). Kṛpa earnestly remonstrated with Açvatthāman, who declared his resolution to be unaltered (ε), yoked his steeds to his chariot, and proceeded alone, saying that he would avenge his father (ζ); Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma followed him. Approaching the Pāṇḍava camp, Açvatthāman stopped at the gate (X, 5). He beheld a being of gigantic frame (description; hundreds and thousands of Hṛshīkeṣas issued from its flames) ready to resist him, and fearlessly fought it; it devoured all the weapons of Açvatthāman, who repented of his rash deed, and resolved to seek the protection of Mahādeva (X, 6), to whom he recited a hymn (η). A golden altar appeared before him with a blazing fire on it; many mighty beings of extraordinary appearance came there (description), worshippers of Mahādeva. Açvatthāman felt no fear at the sight; he offered himself to Mahādeva as a libation on the fire; Mahādeva appeared and declared that the period of life of everybody in the camp had run out; he gave a sword to Açvatthāman and filled him with his own energy; many invisible beings and Rā. proceeded to his right and left as he set out (X, 7). He asked Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma to stand at the gate and slay everybody who would seek to escape; he entered the Pāṇḍava camp like a thief and slew Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (θ) (description; he employed the Rudra weapon); Rā. uttered loud roars in joy; also Y. came there; Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma set fire to the Pāṇḍava camp in three places; "Arjuna is incapable of being vanquished by D., A., G., Y., and Rā." Before midnight the vast host of the Pāṇḍavas was slain by Açvatthāman; the camp was invaded by Rā. and Pç. that gorge upon blood and flesh. Açvatthāman forgot his grief for his father; when morning dawned he issued from the camp and joined Kṛpa and Kṛtavarma. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked why Açvatthāman did not achieve such a feat before; Sanjaya answered that the absence of the Pāṇḍavas with Kṛṣṇa, as also the sleep, was the cause of Açvatthāman's success. They congratulated each other and resolved to give notice of the slaughter to Duryodhana (X, 8). They beheld Duryodhana still living, surrounded by wolves, hyenas, etc. They lamented and informed him (ι); Açvatthāman asked him, when he came to heaven, to inform Droṇa and embrace Bāhlīka, etc. (κ), and informed him who were yet alive (λ) and who had been slain (μ). Duryodhana regained his senses and praised Açvatthāman, etc. (ν). Saying "we shall all meet again in heaven", he gave up his life-breaths; his soul ascended to heaven. At early dawn Sanjaya came to the city and lost his spiritual sight. Açvatthāman, etc., ascended their chariots. Dhṛtarāṣṭra breathed long and hot sighs (X, 9).

Vaidēhī, q.v.

Sitā², a goddess (the goddess presiding of corn, PCR.). § 599_b (Çalya): VII, 105_v, 3945 (sitā bhrajate . . . sarva-bhjaviruddhava yatha Sitā Çriyā vṛtā).

Sitā³, one or more rivers. § 423 (Gandhamādanapr.): III, 145, 11063 (only B., C. has çitā as an adj. to Bhūgīrathī, "cool" PCR.).—§ 459 (Mārkaṇḍeyas.): III, 188_a, 12907 (among the rivers seen by Mārkaṇḍeya in the stomach of Nārāyaṇa).—§ 574_f (Bindusaras): VI, 6_η, 243 (among the seven streams into which Gaṅgā divides herself).—§ 575_b (Çākadvīpa): VI, 11_γ, 432 (in Çākadvīpa; reading of B: Çitāçi Venikā or Çitā Çivenikā?).—§ 641 (Rājadh.): XII, 82, 3099 (°ā nāma nadi, rājan, yatra plavo nimajjati).

Sitāçva ("having white horses") = Arjuna: III, †11898.

Sitāharana(m) ("the carrying away of Sitā"). § 529 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.). Rāvaṇa caused Mārīca to entice away Rāma by assuming the shape of a deer with golden horns and a golden skin. Seeing this deer Rāma pursued it, like Rudra pursuing the stellar deer (tīrāmrgam) in days of yore; struck with Rāma's arrow Mārīca, imitating Rāma's voice cried out, calling upon Sitā and Lakshmaṇa. Lakshmaṇa, thinking that nobody was able to slay Rāma, at first inclined to stay there and protect Sitā, but as she suspected him, he set out on the track of Rāma. Then Rāvaṇa, in the guise of an ascetic, with shaven head and with a kuṇḍalā and a triple staff, came to the hermitage and began to carry away Sitā to Laṅkā; on his way he was seen by the vulture Jāṭayu (III, 278).

Sitāṅga = Çiva (1000 names¹).

Sitā-Rāvaṇasamvāda ("discourse between Sitā and Rāvaṇa"). § 533 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.). While Sitā in Laṅkā was grieving for Rāma and was waited on by Rākshasas, Rāvaṇa, afflicted by the shafts of Kāma, asked her to accept him as her lord, but was rejected. Sitā continued to dwell there, treated with tenderness by Trijaṭā (III, 281).

Sitasāntvana ("the consoling of Sitā"). § 532 (cf. Rāmopākhyānap.). In Laṅkā Rāvaṇa placed Sitā in an abode equal to Nandana and caused Rākshasas and Piçācis to guard her. The Rākshasi Trijaṭā told her of the Rākshasa Avindhya who had told her of Rāma's and Lakshmaṇa's meeting with Sugrīva and of the curse of Nalakūbara (b) which prevented Rāvaṇa from violating Sitā, and of a dream of evil omens about Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarna, etc., running towards a southern direction, but of good omens about Vibhishana and his four counsellors (ascending the mountain Çveta), and Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, and Sītā (running to a northern direction) (III, 280).

Sītavana, name of a tirtha. § 361 (Tirthayātrāp.): III, 83, 6029 (so B., C. has Ṣī°).

Skanda¹, the senāpati of the gods, son of Agni and Svāhā, reared by the Kṛttikās, armed with a dart (śakti) and having a peacock (mayūra) for his device. (Kārttikeya, Gāṅgeya), who was seen by the Kṛttikāḥ, and having assumed six mouths, sucked them all. Himavat was transformed into gold, and from this reason mountains became producers of gold. Lying on that golden clump of reeds he was praised by G., etc. Gāṅgā waited upon him, and Earth held him; the celestial priest Brhaspati performed the usual rites (jātakarmādikāḥ kriyāḥ); the Veda in a fourfold form (caturmūrtiḥ) and the fourfold (caturpādah) Dhanurveda and all weapons (çastragrāmāḥ asaṅgrahaḥ) approached him. One day he saw Çiva and Umā amid a swarm of ghastly creatures (description). Also the seven Mātṛs were present there, and S., V.-D., M., V., P., R., Ā., Si., Serpents, Dū., the birds, Brahmān with his two sons, and Vishnu and Indra, and D.-G. headed by Nārada and D.-ç., and Si. headed by Brhaspati, and the fathers of the universe who are the gods of even the gods, and the Yāmas and Dhāmas. Çiva, Umā, Gāṅgā, and Agni each thought: "he will come to me," therefore he by his yoga power assumed four forms; Skanda went to Rudra, Viçakha to Umā, Çakha (which is his Yāyū-form) to Agni, Naigameya to Gāṅgā. D., Dū., and Rā. made a loud noise. Rudra, Umā, Agni, and Gāṅgā prevailed upon Brahmān, who had formerly given away the sovereignties of D., G., Rā., Bh., Y., birds, and Pn., that he gave him the state of a generalissimo (saināpatya) among all creatures; and Brahmān ordered the kings of the hosts of the gods to wait upon him. Then the gods headed by Brahmān, taking Skanda with them, came together to Himavat for his installment on the bank of the Sarasvatī (puṇyam Haimavatīm devīm), which at Samantapañcaka is celebrated over the three worlds; there D. and G. cheerfully took their seats (IX, 44). Collecting all articles for the investiture according to the scriptures, Brhaspati duly poured libations into the fire; Himavat gave a seat adorned with gems, on which Kārttikeya was seated; Indra, etc. (γ) there came together; Brahmān, Kāśyapa, etc., poured water from the Sarasvatī upon Skanda, even as the gods had poured water on the head of Varuṇa, the lord of the waters, in order to invest him with sovereignty. Brahmān gave to Skanda four mighty companions (mahāpūrishadān) with speed like the wind, and crowned with ascetic success (siddhān): Nandisena, Lohitākṣa, Ghaṇṭakarna, and Kumudamālin. Sihaṇu gave to Skanda a mighty companion (pāriśhadan) capable of producing 100 illusions, and who, in the great battle between the gods and the Asuras, slew with his hands alone 14 millions (prayutāni caturdaśa). Then the gods made over to Skanda an army consisting of Nairṛtas of a form like that of Viṣṇu. Then D. with Ī., G., Y., Rā., Mu. and P. shouted "victory" (jayaśabdān). Then Yama gave him two companions (anucarau), both of whom resembled Death (read Yamaḥ Kālopanau with C., B. has Yama-Kālopanau): Unmātha and Prāmātha. Sarya gave him two of his followers, Sudhṛaja and Bhāṣvara; Soma gave him two companions (anucarau): Maṇi and Sumaṇi, both like summits of Kailāsa, with white garlands and white unguents. Agni gave to his son (i.e. Skanda) the heroic Jvalājihva and Jyotiḥ. Aṃṣa gave him five companions: Parigṛha, etc. (δ). Indra gave him two companions: Utkroṣa and Pañcaka, armed with thunderbolt and club respectively, and who had in battle slain innumerable enemies of Indra. Viṣṇu gave him three companions: Cakra, etc. (ε). The Āpṛis gave him Vardhana and Nandana, who had mastered all the sciences. Dhātṛ gave him five companions: Kunda, etc. (ζ). Tvaṣṭṛ gave him Cakra and Anucakra, both capable of producing illusions (mahāmāyau), etc. Mitra gave him Suvrata and Satyasandha of great learning and ascetic merits (tapovidyā-dharau), and capable of granting boons. Vidhātṛ gave him Suprabha and Ḍubhakarman. Pāśan gave him two companions (pārshadāu): Pāṇṭaka and Kālaka, with great powers of illusion (mahāmāyavinau). Gayu gave him Bala and Atibala, with great mouths. Varuṇa gave him Yama and Atiyama (PCR.: Ghasa and Atighasa), with mouths like that of the timī. Himavat gave him Sucarcas and Ativarcas. Maru gave him Kāncana and Meghamālin. Manu gave him Sthira and Atisthira. Vindhya gave him Ucchrīṅga and Atiṣṭṛṅga (PCR.: Ucchrīṭa and Agniṣṭṛṅga) who fought with large stones. Samudra (the ocean) gave him Saṅgraha and Vigraha, armed with maces. Pārvatī gave him Unmāda, Ḍaṅkukarna, and Pushpadanta. Vāsuki gave him the snakes Jaya and Mahājaya. Similarly S., R., V., P., etc. gave commanders of forces armed with lances, etc. Moreover, there were several other combatants: Ḍaṅkukarna, etc. (η). Besides, Brahmān gave him thousands upon thousands of mighty companions, devoted to ascetic austerities and regardful of brahmans, of different ages and with different kinds of faces (extremely fanciful description; the faces of some resembled that of Garuḍa, etc.), they spoke various kinds of languages (nānābhāṣāḥ; kuṣala dāḍabhāṣāu) (IX, 45). Also the large bands of the Mothers (Mātṛgaṇān), those slayers of foes, by whom the universe is pervaded, became the companions of Kumāra; the names of the Mātṛs are: Prabhāvatī, etc. (θ) (description), some of them partook of the nature of Yama, some of that of Rudra, etc. (i); they were beautiful like Āps, in voice they resembled the kokila, in prosperity Kubera, in battle their energy resembled that of Indra, etc., they have their abodes on trees and open spots and crossings of four roads, also in caves, crematoriums, mountains, and springs; they speak different languages.

Indra gave to Guhā (i.e. Skanda) a dart for the destruction of the enemies of the gods (description), and a banner. Śiva gave him a large army named Dhananājaya, protected by 30,000 warriors equal to Rudra himself. Viṣṇu gave him a triumphal garland that enhanced the power of the wearer. Uma gave him two pieces of cloth, of effulgence like that of the sun. Gaṅgā a celestial waterpot produced from amṛta. Garuḍa gave him his favourite son Citrabārahin, a peacock. Aruṇa gave a cock of sharp talons. Varuṇa gave a snake of great energy. Brahmān gave him, as devoted to the Brāhmaṇ (brahmanyaya), a black deerskin and (Lokabhāvanah, presumably = Brahmān) victory in all battles. (Description of Skanda's army.) The gods with Indra praised Kumāra. The D-G. sung, and Āps danced. Skanda granted a boon to all the gods, saying: "I shall slay all your foes." He then, with that vast host, set out for the destruction of the Dāityas, having Exertion (Vyavasāya), etc. (κ) in the van. All Dai., Rā., and Dā. fled, pursued by the gods. Millions of darts issued from Skanda's dart. He at last slew Tūraka (the chief of the Dāityas), etc. (λ); the foes were consumed with flames, produced by Skanda; many were killed by his roars alone, etc. (description). Bali's son, the Dāitya Bāṇa, took shelter within the Krauñca mountain (named after its sound, resembling the cry of a krauñca bird) which Kārttikeya (i.e. Skanda) pierced with that dart given to him by Agni (! v. the note of PCR., page 186) (description); Vd. soared into the air; K. became very anxious; Dui. came out and were slain together with that son of the Dāitya chief and his younger brother. Repeatedly hurled from Skanda's hand, the dart repeatedly came back to him. The gods, G. and M-ṛ (yajñānaḥ) honoured Skanda (yoginām īṣṭvaram), the celestial ladies showered plenty of flowers upon him. Some speak of him as Sanātkumāra (the eldest son of Brahmān), some as the son of Maheṣvara, and some as that of Agni, or of Uma, or of the Kṛttikā, or of Gaṅgā. That tirtha on the Sarasvatī then became a second heaven; staying there Skanda gave to everybody various kinds of dominion and bestowed the three worlds on the foremost of the Nairṛtas (Nairṛtamukhyebhyaḥ, so both B. and C.; "the foremost ones of the celestials," PCR.): IX, 44, 2488; 45, 2628, 2537, 2539, 2540, 2542, 2557 (śya sainikāḥ), 2617 (śyānucaraḥ); 46, 2671, 2686, 2688, 2697.—§ 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 46, 2724, 2727 (abhiṣikṭaḥ, all. to § 615u).—§ 619 (Strīvilāp): XI, 23, 652 (*śto . . . Skanda = Sūrya (the Sun): III, 148.—Do.³ = Īra (1000 names³). Do.⁴ = Viṣṇu (1000 names).

Skānda (XIII, 2013), v. Skanda'.

[Skanda-Çakra-samāgama(h)] ("meeting of Skanda with Indra").—§ 499 (cf. Skandotp.). The planets (grahāḥ) and apagrahas (see BR.), Mātṛs and the ganas of the parishads preceded by Fire and other terrible gods waited on Skanda. Indra, with the hosts of the gods approached, mounted on Airāvata, in order to kill him. But Skanda defeated them by flames, and when Indra pierced his right side with his thunderbolt, thence sprang forth an armed youth Viçākha (vajra-viçandā jāto, v. 14384), and Indra and the gods sought and obtained the protection of Skanda (III, 227).

Skandadhara = Vishṇu (1000 names).

Skandamātr ("the mother of Skanda") = Durgā (Umā): VI, 803.

Skandāpasmara, name of a demon. § 502 (Manushyagrahuk): III, 230, 14479.

Skandarāja = Skanda: XII, 12327 (C. has Skandha°).

Skandaviçākha = Çiva: XIII, 907 (C. has Skandha°).

[Skandayuddha(m)] ("the combat of Skanda"). § 503 (cf. Manushyagr.). Then Scāho, the daughter of Dakṣha, who had in vain loved Agni from her childhood, prevailed upon Skanda that she should live for ever with Agni, in so far as offerings with mantras to the gods and pitṛs (havyam kavyāṇ ca) should always be coupled with the name of Scāha.—§ 504. Then Skanda was sent by Brahmān to his father Rudra: for Rudra and Umā had entered Agni and Scāha, and from this combination Skanda had sprung; Rudra's semen had been thrown back upon the hill, whence sprang forth Miñjika and Miñjika, and portions of it fell into the Blood Sea, into the rays of the sun, upon the earth, and upon the trees, whence sprang forth the various troops of his parishadas, living on flesh. These five classes of spirits should be honoured with sun-flowers (arkapushpāḥ: Calotropis gigantea) for the sake of wealth and healing of diseases; Miñjika and Miñjika must be honoured for the welfare of children; the females, named Pradhikas, who were produced in the trees and live on human flesh, must be worshipped by persons who desire to have children. These are the innumerable ganas of Piçācas.—§ 505. Airāvata had two bells named Vajrayanti; Indra gave one of them to Viçākha and the other one to Skanda; the standards of Skanda and Viçākha were red. Skanda, surrounded by troops of Piçācas and gods, sat on the golden mountain with the toys that had been given to him by the gods. Description of the Çeta mountain.—§ 506. Then Çiva, with Pārvatī, rode in their shining chariot, yoked with 1,000 lions and managed by Kāla, to Bhadravata; they were preceded by Kubera (riding in Pushpaka) with the Guhyakas, and followed by Indra (riding on Airāvata) and the gods; in the right wing of his army was the great Yakṣa Amogha, with the Jrmbhikas, Yakṣas, Rakṣasas, Vasus, Rudras, etc.; there was also Yama, with Mṛtyu, surrounded by hundreds of terrible diseases; behind Yama the trident of Çiva, named Vajaya, surrounded by Varuṇa, with various aquatic animals; the passiça of Rudra surrounded by clubs, etc., and followed by the umbrellas of Rudra, and after this the water-vessel, worshipped by the troops and maharshis, and on the right side of this the sceptre (danḍāḥ), with Bhṛgu, Angirases, and gods. Behind these rode Rudra in his white chariot, followed by rivers, etc.; Apsarasas, nakṣatras, planets, the children of the gods, etc., and Parjanya. Soma held a white umbrella over his head, and Agni and Vayu held the two fans. Behind him came Indra and the rājarehis, and Gauri, Vidyā, etc., and the sciences (vidyāgaṇāḥ). In the front the Rakṣas graha advanced, holding the standard. The foremost of Yakṣas, Piṅgala, the friend of Rudra, who is always busy in places where corpses are burned, at one time was ahead of the army and at another behind it. Rudra is worshipped by mortals with virtuous actions in various forms. At the request of Çiva, Skanda took the command of the seventh army corps (skandhasya) and was advised always to look up to Çiva, then he should attain great welfare.—§ 507. Omens frightened Çiva, Pārvatī, the gods, and the Dānavas (Aśuras, Dailyas); Indra encouraged the gods when about to flee; the Dānava Mahisha crushed 10,000 of the gods with a mountain, put Indra and the gods to flight, and seized the pole of Rudra's chariot, while heaven and earth groaned, etc., and the maharshis lost their senses, but (as Rudra did not choose to kill him himself) Skanda killed him, cutting off his head that barred the entrance of sixteen yojanas [to the Uttara-Kurus, Nil.], though the Uttara-Kurus at present pass easily by that gate. The Dānavas fell in large numbers from the lance and arrows of Skanda; the lance always returned to his hand again after killing thousands of enemies; the parishadas of Skanda devoured them and drank their blood. When the Dānavas were defeated, Skanda went to Çiva and was embraced and praised by Indra. Then Indra, with the gods, took leave from Çiva and left the place, and Rudra returned to Bhadravata, after having recommended to the gods to render allegiance to Skanda just as to himself. In one day Skanda had killed the Dānavas and conquered the three worlds* (ch. 231).

Skandākṣa, a warrior of Skanda. § 616u (Skanda): IX, 467, 2562.

Skandha, a serpent. § 67 (Sarpasattra): I, 57, 2160 (only B., C. has Maniskandhaḥ instead of Mañiḥ Skandhaḥ).

Skandharāja, v. Skandarāja.

Skandhaviçākha, v. Skandaviçākha.

[Skandopākhyāna(m)] ("episode of Skanda").—§ 500 (cf. Skanda-Çakra-samāg.). The Parishadas of Skanda: When Skanda was struck with the thunderbolt, a number of male children were produced, who steal little children, whether born or in the womb, as also a number of female children. They adopted Viçākha as their father. Bhadraçākha (form of Skanda, cf. v. 14400), with a face like that of a goat, in the battle protected his sons and daughters, in the presence of the mothers. Therefore they call Skanda Kumārapiṭṛ (so B., C. has Kumāram pīṭaram), and those who desire to have sons worship Rudra as Agni, and Umā as Scāha (so C., B. has Agnimukhāṁ instead of Agnim Umām). The daughters of the Tapa fire obtained from Skanda that they became the mothers of the whole world; some of them should be good (çirāḥ) and some evil (acirāḥ). Having adopted Skanda as their son, the host of the mothers departed. Kākī, Ilalimā, etc. (in all seven) (a) had, by the grace of Skanda, a terrible son Çiçu, who is named virāṣṭhaka (i.e. consisting of eight men) or, when the goat's head is included, naraka (i.e. consisting of nine). The sixth face of Skanda is that of a goat, the best of the six, honoured by the mothers, that by which Bhadraçākha created the divine energy (çaktim yendrajāḥ divyam). This happened on the fifth day of the bright half of the month, and on the sixth a terrific battle took place (III, 228).—§ 501. Description of Skanda. Çrī, embodied and looking like a lotus, rendered her allegiance to him. The brahmanas and maharshis praised him, saying: "Hiranyagarbha! thou who wast born only six nights ago, do thou become Indra," and at his request they explained to him the offices of Indra (b). Even Indra besought him to become the lord of the gods. But, at the request of Skanda, Indra retained his sovereignty, and, with all the gods, anointed Skanda as the leader of the celestial forces, and fastened the celestial wreath of gold, of Viṣṇu's manufacture, round his neck. Rudra came with Pārvatī and honoured him. Skanda is called the son of Rudra because Agni is called Rudra by brahmins, and because he was produced by Rudra entering Fire, and because he was honoured by Rudra before all the gods, and because the Çveta mountain, where he was reared by the Kṛttikās, was formed of Rudra's semen virile. The red cock, given him by Agni, formed the ensign of Skanda, perched on the top of his chariot. The power (çakti) which conduces to the victory of the gods, advanced before him. An innate armour entered into his body, and always manifests itself on the battle-field. Under the recitation of holy texts he was honoured by D., G., Aps., Pç., etc. Then he married Devasenā (names v. 14451), Bṛh. performing the necessary prayers and oblations. Then Lakṣmī began to serve him. Therefore the fifth lunar day is called Çrī-pañcamī, and the sixth "a great tithi" (mahatithi) (III, 229).

Mārkaṇḍeya promised to tell the story of Kṛttikāya, the son of Adbhuta, begotten of the wives of the Brahmarṣhis. Formerly, when the Asuras always defeated the gods, Indra, anxious to find out a leader for the celestial host, repaired to the Mānasa mountain, and, hearing a woman crying for protection, rescued her from the Asura Kēçin, whom he wounded and put to flight (III, 223). She told Indra that she was Devasenā, daughter of Prajāpati, and that her sister Daityasenā had let herself be taken away by Kēçin from the Mānasa mountain, where they used to sport with their female friends with the permission of Prajāpati. Indra said that she was a sister's daughter of his mother Dakṣāyaṇī. She asked Indra to select a husband for her, who was able to conquer the gods, Dānavas, Yakṣas, Kinnaras, Uragas, Rakṣasas, and Daityas. Indra was grieved, thinking there was no such husband for her.—§ 496. Then Indra perceived the Sun rising from the Udaya hill, and Soma (the Moon) entering the Sun on the amāvasyā (new-moon day) at the Raudra muhūrta, and the gods and Asuras fighting on the Udaya mountain, the morning twilight tinged with red clouds, the Sea blood-red; Bṛhas and Angīrasas offered oblations, and Agni took the oblations and entered the Sun, whilst the Sun was entering the twenty-fourth parvan, and Sindhu was flowing with a current of fresh blood, etc. Indra thought that, if now Soma or Agni gave birth to a son, this son might become the husband of Devasenā. Then he repaired with Devasenā to the world of Brahmān, who promised that it should be as Indra had thought. Then Indra, with Devasenā, repaired to the place where the Āvarikṣas Vasishṭha, etc. lived, and the gods also came thither to drink soma and receive their shares of offerings, and the Adbhuta fire came from the solar disc to the āhavanīya and made over the offerings to the gods. He, (Adbhuta), then saw the wives of the ṛshis sleeping in their ācramas and fell in love. In order to look at them daily, he entered the gārhapatya fire, and dwelt there for a long time, and at last, from despair, repaired to a forest in order to do away with himself. Svāhā, daughter of Dakṣa, who had in vain loved Adbhuta, now resolved upon assuming the guise of the wives of the seven ṛshis (III, 224). Svāhā first gratified her desire in the guise of Çivā, the wife of Angīras, and then, lest somebody should unduly suspect the brāhmana ladies, she went out of the forest in the guise of a bird (garuḍī, suparṇī), and on the Çveta mountain, that was covered with clumps of reeds and guarded with seven-headed poisonous serpents, rākṣasas, Piṣācas, etc., she threw the semen, which she held in her hand, into a golden basin. Then, assuming successively the form of five of the others, she did the same on the first lunar day (pratipadi). Only the form of Arundhatī she was unable to assume because of her ascetic merit and devotion to her husband. The semen produced a child, whom the ṛshis called Skanda (etymology v. 14315), with six heads, etc. On the second day it first assumed a form, on the 3rd it looked like a little child, on the fourth the limbs were developed. Seizing the bow used by the destroyer of Tripura, Skanda uttered a terrible roar, so that the great nāgas Çitra and Airāvata sprang up. But Skanda seized them with two of his hands, and holding a dart in one hand, a cock in another, etc., and blowing a conch-shell, he terrified the creatures with his roars. The persons of various orders, who they sought the protection of Skanda, are called his followers by the brahmins (gāriṣṭhādān brahmanān, read brahmanāḥ). Discharging his arrows in the direction of the Çveta mountain, he rent asunder the mountain Krauñca, the son of Himavat; therefore the swans and vultures go to the mountain Meru. The other mountains also screamed aloud. Then, with his lance, he rent in twain one of the peaks of the Çveta mountain. Mount Çveta and the other mountains left the Earth and fled; the Earth was torn asunder on all sides; she went to Skanda and regained her power; the mountains bowed down to Skanda and came back to the Earth, and all creatures worshipped Skanda on the fifth day of the lunar month (III, 225).—§ 497. Terrific prodigies were seen everywhere. The ṛshis tried to restore tranquillity to the universe. The inhabitants of the Çaitra-ratha forest accused the wives of the six ṛshis, other ones the fowl (garuḍī) of being the cause thereof; but nobody suspected Svāhā. The seven ṛshis divorced their wives with the exception of Arundhatī, though Svāhā claimed the child as hers. Viṣvāmītra, having concluded the sacrifice of the seven ṛshis, had secretly followed the god of fire, and knew everything as it had happened. He sought the protection of Skanda, and performed for him the thirteen auspicious rites of childhood (māṅgalāni kaumārāṇi): the jātakarman, etc., etc. Though Viṣvāmītra informed the seven ṛshis of the innocence of their wives, yet they abandoned them unconditionally.—§ 498. The gods asked Indra to kill Skanda, but he dared not attack him, saying that Skanda was able to destroy even the Creator of the world. Then they let the Mothers of the world approach in order to kill Skanda, but they adopted him as their son and let him suck their breasts, especially the daughter of Krodha with a spike in her hand, and the daughter of the Red Sea, who lived on blood; and his father Agni came and, transformed into Naigameya (see BR.) with a goat's mouth, gratified him with toys (III, 226).

Sṛñjaya³, father of Suvarṇashthivīn. § 595 (Abhimanyuvadhap.): There was a king of the name Çaibya (C. °vya), his son was S.; the ṛshis Nārada and Parvata were the friends of S. Seeing the daughter of S, Parvata asked if she was Çrī, etc. (a). Nārada obtained her as his wife. Parvata cursed Nārada, saying that he should not go to heaven at his will, and Nārada (enumerating what constitutes a marriage) cursed Parvata, saying that he should not go to heaven without him. Meanwhile, king S, desirous of a son, prevailed upon the brahmins to ask Nārada on his behalf, and, urged by Nārada, he prayed for a son possessed of every accomplishment, and whose urine, etc. should be of gold. This son was named Suvarṇashthivīn ("gold-spitter"), and increased the wealth [of his father] beyond all limits (description). Some robbers seized the prince and slew him, and cut his body into fragments but without finding any gold. The robbers then slew one another and sank into an unimaginably awful hell. To Sṛñjaya, who was afflicted with deep sorrow, the D-ṛ. Nārada told the Shoḍaçarājika (q.v.), i.e., the histories of sixteen kings who had died (except the last, viz. Rāma Jāmadagnya), ending each narrative with the words: "as he died who was superior to thee and to thy son, thou shouldst not grieve for the latter who performed no sacrifice and made no sacrificial present." (Each narrative then ends with the words: Çvairityeti vyāharan [read vyāharat]; Nil. takes Çvaitya (i.e. son of Çvitya) as a name of S, cf. also XII, 1052) (VII, 55-70). [Sudarçanopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Sudarçana"). § 720b (Ānuṣāsanik.). Bṛāhma said: Prajāpati Manu > Ikshvāku > 100 sons; the tenth of those, Daśarṇa, became the king of Māhiśmati; Daśarṇa's son was the pious Madhira > Dyutimat > Suṅvira > Sudurjaya > R-ṛ Duryodhana, in whose kingdom there was no miser, etc., and who was learned in the Vedas and Vedānta. Duryodhana begat the beautiful Sudarçanā upon the river Narmadā; Agni, taking the shape of a brahman, demanded her hand from the king, who would not give her to him; then Agni vanished from his great sacrifice. Duryodhana repaired to the brahmana, who became informed of the matter by Agni; then the king consented, and Agni gave, as a marriage-dower, the boon to the king that he would always remain there, and Agni has always been present there to this day, and was seen by Sahadeva on his digvijaya. She bore to Agni the beautiful Sudarçana, who, even in his childhood, knew Bṛāhma. Sudarçana married Oghavati, the daughter of king Oghavati and the sister of Ogharatha, and dwelt in Karukshetra; he took the vow of conquering death by leading the life of a householder. He instructed Oghavati that, for pleasing a guest, she must not spare even her own person. One day, when Sudarçana went out to fetch firewood, a graceful brahman came to Oghavati and required and obtained her own person. Mṛtyu, with his iron club, was always at the side of Sudarçana, watching him in order to find out his flaws. When Sudarçana came home he showed no anger. The brahman turned out to be Dharma, who was pleased with Sudarçana, and said: "you have conquered Mṛtyu"; Oghavati has been protected from defilement by your virtue and by her own chastity; you will attain to all the worlds in this your body, and, as yoga is in the control of Oghavati, she will follow you with half her corporeal self, being with the other half [the river] Oghavati. Then Indra came, riding in a fine chariot, and approached that brahman.

[Sukanyopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Sukanyā"). § 405 (Tīrthay.). Lomaça related: When Cyavana, the son of the mahārshi Bhṛgu practised austerities by the side of this lake, and, assuming the posture cirasthāna, had been enveloped by an anthill, king Çaryāti came to the lake with his 4,000 wives and his only daughter Sukanyā. The viprārshi Cyavana, seeing Sukanyā, was gladdened and spoke to her, but she did not hear him. Then Sukanyā, seeing his eyes in the anthill, pierced them with thorns from curiosity. He, becoming very angry, obstructed the excrements and urine of Çaryāti's soldiers, and Çaryāti at last discovered the cause of their distress, and only obtained deliverance therefrom by bestowing Sukanyā upon Cyavana. Then Çaryāti, with his troops, went to his city, and Sukanyā remained with Cyavana (III, 122). Once, when the Açvins had seen Sukanyā, after she had bathed, they asked her to choose one of them for her husband, and as she refused, they entered the water together with Cyavana, and when they all came out of the tank young and beautiful they asked her to choose one of them and she choose Cyavana. Cyavana promised them to make them drinkers of soma in the presence of Indra. Then the Açvins, highly delighted, ascended to heaven (III, 123). When Çaryāti heard that Cyavana had been turned into a youth, he came with his wife and troops to see him, and became very glad. Cyavana caused him to perform a sacrifice with Cyavana as his priest. When Cyavana was about to take up soma in order to offer it to the Açvins, Indra forbade it, saying, that they were physicians and servants, assumed forms at pleasure, and roamed about in the world of mortals, and as Cyavana did not obey he prepared to hurl his thunderbolt at him, but Cyavana paralysed his arm and fulfilled his intention. Then he created a kṛtyā, a great Asura named Mada (description); this rushed forth to devour Indra (III, 124), who only was delivered when he had sanctioned that the Açvins should henceforth be entitled to the soma juice, saying that he had only intended to spread the fume of Cyavana and Çaryāti. Cyavana distributed Mada (who had been created repeatedly before) in drinks, women, gambling, and hunting.

Sulabhā - Janaka - samvāda(h) ("the conversation between Sulabhā and Janaka"). § 709b (Mokshadh.). Bhīṣma related the old narrative of the discourse in days of yore, in Dharma-yuga, between king Janaka Mithila Dharmadhva (devoted to renunciation, conversant with the Veda, the moksha-gātra, etc.), whom many wise men desired to imitate, and the female mendicant Sulabhā, who practised Yoga and wandered over the Earth, and had heard from many tridāṇḍins about Janaka. By her Yoga-power she assumed a beautiful form and instantly repaired to Mithila, and, on pretence of begging alms, presented herself before the king, who was surrounded by his ministers and learned scholars. By Yoga she entered the king's consciousness by her own consciousness (sattvaṃ sattvena). Then they conversed upon emancipation. The king said he was a disciple of the bhikṣu Pañcaśikṣā of Parācāra's race, and fully conversant with Sāṅkhya and Yoga, etc.; Pañcaśikṣā had dwelt with him for four months in the rainy season. Sulabhā enumerated thirty principles. Sulabhā was the daughter of R-ṛ Pradhāna; in the sacrifices of her ancestors Indra used to come with Droṇa, etc. (a); no suitable husband could be obtained for her; therefore, she wandered over the earth alone, observant of the practices of asceticism. Sulabhā dwelt this one night in his person like a mendicant in an empty house (XII, 321).

[Sundopasundopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Sunda and Upasunda"). § 246 (Rājyalābhap.). Nārada related: In days of yore the Daitya Nikumbha of the race of Hiranyakaśipu had two sons, Sunda and Upasunda, who always shared with each other happiness as well as woe, and never went anywhere unless together. Desirous of subjugating the three worlds, they practised terrible penances on the mountain Vindhya, which, by the power of their austerities at last began to emit vapour. In vain the gods repeatedly tempted them by means of every precious possession and beautiful girls, and by illusion, causing their sisters, mothers, wives, etc., to appear pursued by a rākṣasa and imploring their help. When Brahmān granted them a boon, they asked to become immortal, which he refused, granting them instead that they should not need to be afraid of anything except each other, etc. They now desisted from their asceticism and returned to their abode, where they lived happy, causing even the moon to rise over their city every night, even out of season (I, 209). They set out to conquer the three worlds in the night under the constellation of Maghāḥ, with a large Daitya force cased in mail, etc. The gods sought refuge in Brahmaloka, and the Daityas subjugated Indraloka, and vanquished the tribes of the Yakṣas and Rakṣasas, and the Khecaras, and the Nāgas in the earth, and the tribes of the Mlecchas dwelling in the ocean. In order to extinguish the sacrifices that strengthened the gods, they slew those that were performing sacrifices and the assistant brahmins, etc. Then they took up their abode in Kurukṣetra (I, 210). The Devarṣis and Siddhas and rṣis were affected with great grief, and went to the abode of Pitāmaha, seated with the gods, the Siddhas, and the Brahmarshis, Mahādeva, Agni, Vāyu, the sun and moon, Čakra, the Paramaśeṭhya rṣis, the Vaikāṇasas, the Vālakhilyas, the Vānaprasthas, the Marteipās, the Ajas, the Avimāḍhas, etc. Brahmān sent Tilottamā (b) to them (I, 211). She came to Sunda and Upasunda as they were sporting in the Vindhya mountains, and from jealousy they struck each other to death with their maces. And Pitāmaha then came there with the gods and the great rṣis, and granted to Tilottamā that she should room in the region of the Ādityas. Then, bestowing the three worlds on Indra as before, he returned to his own region.

Suvarnavarna = Vishnu (1000 names).

[Suvarnotpatti] ("the origin of gold"). § 747b (Anuçāsanik.). Vasishtha told to Rāma Jamadagnya (and again Bhishma to Yudhishtira): After the wedding of Rudra and Devi on Himavat, all the gods, fearing that Rudra's offspring would consume the worlds, prevailed upon him to withdraw his vital seed (whence he is called Ūrahvaretas); Uma cursed the gods, saying that they should become sonless; but Agni was not present. A small quantity of Rudra's seed, however, leaped into fire and began to develop; meanwhile, the gods, with Indra, were scorched by As. Tāraka; Ā., V., R., M., A., and Sā. all became afflicted; all the regions of the deities, etc., and the retreats of R. were snatched away by As.; D. and R. repaired to Brahmān (XIII, 84), who had granted Tāraka the boon that he should not be killed by D., As., or Rā., and Uma had cursed D.; Brahmān said that Agni was not there; therefore his offspring, transcending D., Dā., Rā., even G., N., and birds, will with his dart destroy Tāraka; Kāma is eternal, and in order to slay the enemies of the gods Agni will throw Rudra's seed into the Gangā. The gods failed to find out Agni; a frog, having been scorched by the energy of Agni, appeared on the surface of the water, and said to the gods that Agni was now under the water; Agni, leaving the spot, cursed the frogs, saying that they should be without taste; the gods granted them boons (enumeration). An elephant revealed to the gods that Agni was now residing within a certain açvattha tree; Agni, entering the heart of the çami tree, cursed all the elephants, saying that their tongues should be bent back; the gods granted that they should be able to eat everything and utter indistinct cries. Agni was then revealed by a parrot, and cursed the parrots, saying that they should be deprived of the power of speech; the gods granted them to speak the letter k, and made çami-wood a sacred resting-place of fire. The waters in the nethermost regions had come into contact with Agni, and those heated waters were vomited forth by the mountain springs. The gods asked Agni to rescue D., Prajāpatī, and R. from Tāraka by begetting a heroic son. Agni united himself spiritually with Gangā; an Asura uttered a frightful roar; Gangā became agitated and unable to bear the seed, and threw it off on Meru; the foetus had the complexion of gold, etc.; therefore R. and D. called Agni by the name of Hiranyaretas ("having gold for his vital seed"), and the earth Vasumatī ("endued with wealth"). That foetus, having fallen in a thicket of reeds, assumed a wonderful form; the Kṛttikāḥ reared it as their son, whence it came to be called Kṛttikēya; he was also called Skanda and Guha (etymology). It was in this way that gold came into existence as the offspring of Agni (Jātavedas), and hence gold was called jātārūpa; gold is truly the illustrious Agni, the lord of all things, and the foremost of all Prajāpatīs; the most sacred of all sacred things is gold; it has for its essence Agni and Soma.—Vasiṣṭha continued: This tale (Brahmadarçana) was also heard by me in days of yore about Brahmān Paramātman ("the Supreme Soul"): In days of yore (lokādaṁ, v. 4163), Rudra, who is Brahmān, etc. (ḥ), having assumed the form of Varuṇa (cf. v. 4133, Varuṇaḥ Pāvanātmakāḥ), performed a sacrifice, to which came the munis and all the deities with Agni, etc. (e); Çiva (i.e. Rudra) then himself poured libations into his own self. At the sight of the celestial damsels the seed (endued with sattva, rajas, and taṁas) of Brahmān fell upon the Earth; Puṣan took it up, and it was taken with the sacrificial ladle and poured as an oblation into the fire; thence Brahmān caused the orders of beings to spring into existence; further Bhṛgu, etc. (ḥ); for this reason Agni is said to be all the deities. Bhṛgu was reckoned the offspring of Varuṇa, Angiras that of Agni, Kavi that of Brahmān; Bhṛgu, Angiras, and Kavi were all of them prajānāṁ patayaḥ; their offspring (v. 4144–4152) (Bhṛgu's: ṛ; Angiras': ḥ; Kavi's: i) are called Varuṇaḥ, and Kavi and Bhṛgu Varuṇau. Agni is Brahmān, Paçupati, etc. (ḥ); gold is the offspring of Agni (v. 4146); when fire is not obtainable gold is used as a substitute, oh Jāmadagnya! (B. and C. wrongly read Jāmadagnyaḥ, which PCR. translates "one that knows the identity of gold with fire") by one who is conversant with the vedic authorities (v. 4165), etc. (v. 4166–7); Agni sprang from Brahmān, and from Agni sprang gold (v. 4168); those persons observant of righteousness who make gifts of gold are regarded as giving away all the deities (v. 4169), etc.; he who makes a gift of gold at the second twilight succeeds in attaining to residence with (adlokyaṁ) Brahmān, Vāyu, Agni, and Soma (v. 4173), and to the regions of Indra (v. 4174), etc.; he has never to fall down from the regions to which he attains (v. 4176). After a long time Kṛttikēya grew up, and was chosen as generalissimo by all the gods with Indra; he slew Dai. Tāraka and many other Asuras. Bhishma continued: "Thus addressed by Vasiṣṭha [Rāma] Jāmadagnya made gifts of gold to the brahmins and became cleansed of his sins" (XIII, 85). [For continuation v. Tārakavadhopākhyāna (§ 748).]

Svargaparvan, Svargārohanika(m)[parva(n)]. § 795. Janamejaya said: "Having attained to Heaven, what regions were respectively reached by my grandfathers, the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhārtarāṣṭras? Thou hast been taught everything by M-γ Vyāsa." Vaiṣampāyana said: "Having arrived in Heaven, Yudhiṣṭhira beheld Duryodhana blazing with effulgence and seated in the midst of Sā.; he expressed his indignation (α) and wished to come to his brothers; Nārada solicited him to desist from his wrath (β); Yudhiṣṭhira indignantly (γ) asked for his brothers and Karna, etc. (δ) (XVIII, 1); Karna especially lay to him at heart, since his mother had ordered him to offer oblations of water unto Karna, and he had noticed the resemblance between the feet of his mother and those of Karna; he would not stay in Heaven if his brothers were not there. The gods ordered a celestial messenger to lead Yudhiṣṭhira to the region reached by his brothers. The path was enveloped in darkness and stench, etc. (description); as he was about to turn back, he heard voices uttering piteous lamentations, calling him by name, and giving evidence to the happiness felt by his presence, and they turned out to come from Karna and his brothers, etc. (ε); he could not understand this perverse order of things (ζ); he censured the gods and Dharma, and declared that he would stay in Hell in order to comfort his relatives. The messenger returned and represented this to Indra (XVIII, 2). All the gods: M. with Indra, V., A., Sā., R., Ā., Si., M-r. and Dharma came to Yudhishtira; the illusions of Hell (the river Vaitaraṇī, etc.) disappeared; Indra informed him that Hell should be seen by every king; he who first endures Hell must afterwards enjoy Heaven, and vice versa; Yudhishtira must see Hell because he had deceived Droṇa in the matter of his son; similarly Rhima, etc. (η) had been shown Hell; but they have all been cleansed of their sins, and they had, as also Karna, attained to regions of felicity; D., G., and Aps. should wait upon Yudhishtira; his regions are far above those of kings and equal to those of Haricandra, etc. (θ). Dharma said that this was the third test to which he had put him (ι). Having bathed in the celestial Gaṅgā, he left his human body and assumed a celestial form, and became divested of all his enmities and grief. Accompanied by Dharma and praised by M-r, he reached that place where the Pāṇḍavas and the Dhṛtarāṣṭras, freed from wrath, were enjoying each his respective status (XVIII, 3). Yudhishtira, praised by D., M., and R., proceeded to that place where the foremost ones of the Kurus were; he beheld Govinda (Kṛṣṇa) in his Brāhma-form (description), adored by Arjuna; in another place Karna in the company of Sārya, etc. (κ); as Yudhishtira wished to question Draupadī, Indra declared that she was Çrī, created for the Pāṇḍavas by Çiva; her five sons are G.; G-king Dhṛtarāṣṭra was his uncle Dhṛtarāṣṭra; Pāṇḍu frequently comes to Indra in his excellent chariot; Bhishma is now in the midst of V.; others walk with G. and Y., etc., or Gh. (XVIII, 4). Janamejaya asked for what period Bhishma, etc. (λ) remained in Heaven, and what became of them when the effect of their actions were exhausted. Sauti said: Thus questioned B-r Vaiçampāyana with the permission of Vyāsa said: Everyone is not capable of returning to his own nature [i.e. final Emancipation, PCR.] when his deeds cease to work [the meaning seems to be that some persons lose their individuality by being absorbed into some deity before final Emancipation, but the text itself is corrupt]; this is a mystery of the gods, explained by Vyāsa, who is omniscient; Bhishma attained to the state of V. [absorbed in V., not as a separate individual: śayujya, not śālokya, PCR.]; therefore, now eight Vasus are seen; etc. (μ). Sauti then related the conclusion of Janamejaya's (b) snake-sacrifice. "I have now told thee everything that Vaiçampāyana narrated, at the command of Vyāsa, unto the king at his snake-sacrifice. It is a sacred tale, etc., composed by Vyāsa" (eulogy of Vyāsa) (ν), *; eulogy, etc., of Mahābhārata (ς) (XVIII, 5-6).

Svargārohanika(m) [parva] ("[the section] relating to the ascension to heaven"). § 10 (Pārvasaṅg.): I, 2, 356 (°ap, sc. parva, i.e. Svargārohanaparvan).

Svargārohanika(m) parva(n) ("Bhishma's ascension to Heaven"), the 92nd of the minor parvas of Mhbhr. § 10 (Pārvas.): I, 2, 353.—§ 777. Vaiçampāyana said: When Yudhishtira had taken leave of the citizens, etc., he comforted the widows, whose husbands had been slain, with abundant gifts, and being duly installed on the throne, he reassured all his subjects [by acts of goodwill], etc. After fifty days, seeing that the sun had begun its northern course, he set out to see Bhishma, taking with him what was necessary for the latter's cremation, accompanied by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī, Kuntī, his brothers, Kṛṣṇa, Vidura, Yuyutsu, Yuyudhāna, and his other relatives and a great retinue, and his priests. He beheld Bhishma surrounded by R Vyāsa, Nārada, Asita Devala, and by the remnant of unslain kings from various parts of the country, guarded by the warriors appointed for that duty; all the inhabitants of Kurujāṅgala were also there. When Yudhishtira had told his errand, Bhishma opened his eyes and saw all the Bharatas assembled. He seized the hand of Yudhishtira and welcomed him; he had now been lying there for fifty-eight nights, which he had felt to be as long as a century; now it was the bright fortnight of Māgha, and of this one-fourth had passed away. Then he reminded Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the instructions he had received from Vyāsa, and that he should regard the Pāṇḍavas and especially Yudhishtira as his own sons. Then he praised Kṛṣṇa as the Supreme God, and asked him to grant him leave to die, and that he should ever protect the Pāṇḍavas; he complained that Duryodhana had never been willing to follow his counsels; he said that he knew from Nārada and Vyāsa, that Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were R Nārāyaṇa and Nara, who had lived for a long time in Badarī. Kṛṣṇa then gave Bhishma leave to die and come to the Vasus, comparing him to Mārkaṇḍeya. Having given some few admonitions to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (XIII, 168), Bhishma successively caused his life-breaths to leave his body, and the parts of his body became successively free from wounds and arrows, at which the bystanders became filled with wonder. His soul passed through the crown of his head, ascended to heaven like a meteor, and soon became invisible, while the celestial kettle-drums began to play, a rain of flowers fell down, and Si. and B-r. applauded. Then the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (α) cremated the corpse. Then, accompanied by R., etc. (β), they proceeded to Bhāgīrathī (Gaṅgā), where they offered oblations of water to Bhishma. Then Bhāgīrathī appeared and, weeping, praised Bhishma (γ). Kṛṣṇa comforted her, mentioning the present felicity of Bhishma as one of the Vasus, and declared that he had not been slain by Çikhaṇḍin, but by Arjuna. Gaṅgā gave up her grief; all the kings, headed by Kṛṣṇa, obtained her permission to depart, and all returned [to the city] (XIII, 169).

[Svayamvaraparvan(°va)] ("the section relating how Draupadī chose herself a husband", the 12th of the minor parvans of Mbhhr.). (Cf. Svayamvara). § 231. The Pāñḍavas went to the Pāñcāla land in the company of brahmanas, who told them of the svayamvara, and of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, and Kṛṣṇa (I, 184). On their way they beheld Dvapīdyana. They took up their quarters in the house of a potter, and adopting the brahmanical profession, they began to lead a mendicant life. Yajñasena (= Drupada) always cherished the wish of bestowing his daughter on Kṛtiṣin (i.e. Arjuna), but never spoke of this wish to anybody. He therefore caused a very stiff bow to be made, which was incapable of being bent by anybody except Arjuna; and causing some machinery to be erected in the sky, he set up a mark attached to that machinery, and said: "He who with this bow and these arrows hits the mark shall obtain my daughter." Among the kings that came were Duryodhana and the Kurus and Karnas. The princes entered the arena by the north-eastern gate (çiṣumdraçiraḥ prāg). The arena was situated to the north-east of the capital (description of it). On the 16th day Draupadī, having bathed, entered the arena. Then the purohita of the Somakas gratified Agni. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, possessing a voice deep as that of a kettle-drum or of the clouds, taking hold of his sister's arm, stood in the midst of the arena, and said: "Hit the mark by means of these five arrows." Then he addressed his sister, reciting to her the names, etc. of the assembled princes (I, 185).—§ 232. Enumeration (a) of the assembled princes (I, 186).—§ 233. There came also the devagaṇas on their chariots; the Rudras and the Ādityas, the Vasus and the Açvins, the Sādhyas and all the Muruts, with Yama and Dhaneçvara (i.e. Kubera) walking ahead; and also the Daityas and Suparnas, the mahoragas, the Devarshis, the Guhyakas and the Cārakas, Viçr̥vaseu, Nārada and Parvata, the principal Gandharvas with the Apsarasas, and the Asuras and Siddhas (v. 7017), and Bālāyudha (i.e. Balarāma), and Janārdana (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), and the chiefs of the Vṛshnis, Andhakas, and Yadus, always obedient to Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa pointed out the Pāṇḍavas to his brother Rāma. When Duryodhana, the Cedi-king Çiçupāla (son of Damaghosha), Jardāandha, the Madraking Çalya, etc. had in vain tried to string the bow, and Karna, though having succeeded in stringing it, had, as a sūta, been rejected by Kṛṣṇa, Jishṇu (i.e. Arjuna) came forward (I, 187). Some of the brahmins spoke reproachingly of Arjuna's daring undertaking, some approved of it (citing Paraçurāma and Agastya's drinking out of the Sea). Arjuna, bending his head to Īçāna and remembering Kṛṣṇa, accomplished the task. The gods showered celestial flowers. Drupada was filled with joy. Yudhiṣṭhira with the twins returned home. Kṛṣṇa approached Arjuna, who soon afterwards left the lists followed by her (I, 188).—§ 234. When Drupada expressed his desire of bestowing his daughter on that brahmin, the kings resolved to slay Drupada and burn Kṛṣṇa, but spare Arjuna, whom they took for a brahmin. They rushed at Drupada, who was defended by Arjuna with the bow and by Bhīma with a tree torn up by the root. Kṛṣṇa then knew, and said to Balarāma that they must be the Pāṇḍavas, who had escaped from the fire (I, 189). Karna was defeated by Arjuna ("accomplished in the Brahma and the Paurandara weapons", v. 7105), and the Madraking Çalya by Bhīma; then Duryodhana, etc., who had been engaged with the brahmins, desisted from the combat, because brahmins, though offending, should yet always be protected. Kṛṣṇa said to them that those brahmins had justly acquired the maiden. The kings returned to their respective kingdoms. Bhīma and Arjuna, with difficulty, escaped from the throng, followed by Kṛṣṇa.—§ 235. Kuntī was filled with anxiety, seeing that her sons were late in returning from their begging tour. Then, in the late afternoon, Jishṇu (i.e. Arjuna), accompanied by a body of brahmins, entered the abode of the Bhārgava (i.e. the potter, Nil) (I, 190). Bhīma and Arjuna presented Kṛṣṇa as their "alms", and Kuntī, not yet seeing them, said: "enjoy ye all." Afterwards, she was alarmed at what she had said. Yudhiṣṭhira declared that Arjuna should wed her; but Arjuna replied that it was a sin for the younger brother to marry before the elder. Meanwhile, they all fell in love with Kṛṣṇa. Then Yudhiṣṭhira recollected the words of Vyāsa, and, from fear of a division amongst the brothers, said that she should be the common wife of them all. Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma then paid them a visit, and again went away (I, 191).—§ 236. When Bhīma and Arjuna were turning towards the abode of the Bhārgava, Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna followed them and concealed himself in some part of the house. Then Bhīma and Arjuna and the twins returning from their begging tour in the evening, gave everything to Yudhiṣṭhira. Kuntī caused Kṛṣṇa to distribute it, giving to Bhīma alone as much as to all the others, because he always ate much. Then they laid down for the night, and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna overheard their conversations. In the morning Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna set out to report it to Drupada, who was sad, because he did not know, if perhaps a man of mean descent had taken away his daughter, though he thought it possible that it was Arjuna (I, 192).

Tapatyavardhana = Arjuna: I, 6505.

[Tapaty-upākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Tapatī"). § 222 (Caitrarathap.). Arjuna asked why he had called him Tāpatya, and Citraratha said: "Sūrya had a lovely daughter Tapatī, the younger sister of Savitṛī. Rksha's son, the king Samvarana, duly worshipped Sūrya; to him Sūrya resolved to bestow his daughter. Once, when Samvarana went on a hunting expedition, his steed died from fatigue on the mountain, and he began to wander on foot and saw Tapatī alone, and declared her his love. She did not speak a word, but disappeared. He wandered through the whole forest in search of her, and failing to find her, indulged in lamentations (I, 171). He fell down on the earth. Then she appeared again. He asked her to marry him according to the Gandharva form of marriage. She said that she loved him, but told him to ask her father Āditya for her hand, with worship, ascetic penances, and vows (I, 172). Tapatī then ascended to the skies, and Samvarana again fell down on the earth. At last his followers found him, and his minister raised him up and sprinkled his head with water, etc. Regaining his consciousness, Samvarana sent away all his attendants with the exception of his minister alone, and then began to worship Sūrya. He also thought of his purohita, the ṛshi Vasishṭha. After the king had stayed thus on the same spot day and night, the Vipravarshi Vasishṭha came there on the 12th day. Vasishṭha knew at once, by his ascetic power, what had happened and ascended to the sky in order to see Sūrya, and asked him to give Tapatī to Samvarana. Samvarana, with due rites, took Tapatī's hand on that mountain resorted to by the gods and the Gandharvas. And the king caused Vasishṭha to be proclaimed his regent in his capital and kingdom, etc., and sported with his wife in the woods on that mountain for twelve years. Now Indra for twelve years poured no rain in his capital and kingdom. Then Vasishṭha brought Samvarana and his wife back into the city, and then Indra poured rain in abundance. Samvarana, with Tapatī, performed sacrifices for twelve years. Their son was Kuru, the ancestor of Arjuna (I, 173).

Tārakārāja ("king of the stars") = Soma (the Moon): III, 1678.

Tārakavadhopākhyāna ("the episode relating to the destruction of Tāraka"; continuation of Suvarṇopatti, § 747b). § 748b (Ānuṣāsanik.): D. and R., reduced to great distress [by Tāraka's prowess and the conduct of Gaṅgā by throwing away Agni's seed], urged the six Kṛttikāḥ to rear that child [i.e. Skanda]. Amongst the celestial ladies there were none, save these, that could bear the seed of Agni in their wombs. Agni became gratified. His energy was divided into six portions, and a portion was placed in each of the Kṛttikās. All of them were delivered at the same time, and the six portions united into one. The Earth received the child from a heap of gold. He grew up in a celestial forest of reeds, reared by the Kṛttikās (whence he came to be called Kṛttikēya; etymology of Skanda and Guha). The thirty-three gods, etc. (a) came to see him; R. praised him, G. sang in honour of Kumāra, with six faces, etc. (description). The gods gave him various kinds of toys, etc. (β). Rā. and As. began to walk in the train of Skanda. Tāraka in vain sought, by various means, to slay him. The gods made him the commander of their forces, and when he had grown up he slew Tāraka with his irresistible dart as in sport, and re-established Indra in the sovereignty. Skanda became the protector of the gods and [always] did what was agreeable to Çaikara (i.e. Īva). Gold is the powerful energy of Agni and was born [from the same seed] with Kṛttikēya; hence gold is highly auspicious. Thus did Vasishṭha relate to Itāma [Jāmadagnya] in days of old. By making gifts of gold Rāma became purified of all his sins, and [finally] attained to a high place in heaven that is not easily attainable by men (XIII, 86).

[Tīrthayātrāparvan(°va)] ("the episode relating to the pilgrimage to the tirthas", the 36th of the minor parvas of Mbhr. Cf. Tīrthayātrā). § 356: Draupadī, Bhīmasena, Nakula, and Sahadeva lamented Arjuna; Sahadeva suggested to move from the Kāmyaka wood (III, 80). Then came the devarshi Nārada who, at the request of Yudhishtīra, told them what the brahmarshi Pulastya had formerly said to Bhīshma about the merits of circumambulating (pradakṣiṇāṇi yaḥ kurute) the earth for the purpose of visiting the tirthas, when Bhīshma was engaged in a pitṛya vrata at Gāṅgādvāra (resorted to by devarshis, Gandharvas, and gods) in the company of munis, and made oblations to the pitṛs, gods, and ṛṣhis (III, 81). At Bhīshma's request Pulastya explained the qualities of a person who will acquire merit by visiting tirthas; he said that the costly sacrifices, which only kings and very rich men are capable of affording, are not of greater merit than a sojourn in tirthas, which even the poorest may accomplish.—§ 357: Then he first described Pushkara (q.v.).— § 358: Then he enumerated a great many of tirthas and the merit of visiting them.—§ 359: Vadavā (q.v.).—§ 360:

 § 373: Prayāga (q.v.).—§ 374: The enumeration continued.
 —§ 375: Gāṅgā is equal to Kurukṣetra, wherever one may bathe in it, especially in Kanakhala and in Prayāga, which is the most excellent; a bath in the Gāṅgā in that place removes 100 sins. In the Kṛtāyuga all the tirthas were sacred, in the Tretāyuga Pushkara alone, in the Dvāpara Kurukṣetra, in the Kaliyuga Gāṅgā. In Pushkara one should practise austerities, in Mahālaya one should make gifts, on the Malaya one should ascend the funeral pyre, in Bhṛgutuṅga one should kill oneself by fasting; bathing in Pushkara, Kurukṣetra, the Gāṅgā, and Magadha (PCR. seems to have had another reading) one purifies seven generations of one's race upwards and downwards, etc.; as long as one's bones lie in contact with the water of the Gaṅgā, so long does one live, honoured in heaven (Śrargaloke). Pitāmaha has said that no tīrtha is equal to the Gaṅgā, no God to Keśava, and none is superior to brahmins. This truthful description one should recite only to the twice-born, etc. (*). In these tīrthas have bathed the Vasus, the Sādhyas (so B.), the Ādityas, the Maruts, the Aśvins, and the Rakhs, who are equal to the gods. Only men of piety and learning are able to visit these tīrthas on account of their purified senses, their belief in god (āstikyāt), and their acquaintance with the Vedas (end of Pulastya's discourse, in which Yudhishtira sometimes is addressed instead of Bhishma).—§ 376: Nārada continued: Then Pulastya disappeared, and Bhishma (who understood the śāstras), at the command of Pulastya, wandered over the earth and ended his tīrthayātrā at Prayāga. The man that so walks about the earth is rewarded after death as much as for 100 horse sacrifices. "So wilt thou Yudhishtira obtain the eight-fold (aṣṭaguṇam) dharma, as Bhishma did before, and because thou wilt lead the ṛshis, thy merit will be eight-fold; those tīrthas are infested by Rākshasas, and no king, save thyself, has gone there (*). The foremost of ṛshis are always there and expect thee: Valmiki, Kaśyapa, Ātreya, Kuṇḍajāthara, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Asita Devala, Mārkaṇḍeya, Gālava, Bharadvāja, Vasishtha, Uddālaka, Çuunaka with his son, Vyāsa, Duvāsa, and Jābali. With them do thou visit these tīrthas. The great ṛshi Lomaça will come to thee, do thou follow him and me to these tīrthas." Then Nārada disappeared and Yudhishtira spoke to the ascetics of the tīrthas (III, 85).—§ 377: Dhaumya-tīrthakathana (q.v.).—§ 378: While Dhaumya was speaking thus, Lomaça arrived and told that Arjuna had obtained Brahmagiras (b), learnt the Gāndhārva Veda, etc. (III, 91). Lomaça said that Arjuna had asked him to cause Yudhishtira to visit all tīrthas, like Manu and other rājarsis, and protect him from the Rākshasas as Dadhica had protected Indra and Āṅgiras had protected the Sun. Lomaça had twice before visited the tīrthas. At the command of Lomaça, Yudhishtira caused the citizens, brahmins, and Yatis, who were not able to endure the privations of the journey, to return to Hastinapura, where Dhṛtarāshṭra gave them their proper allowances from affection for Yudhishtira, and Yudhishtira, with only a small number of brahmins abode for three nights at Kāmyaka cheered by Lomaça (III, 92). The brahmins, who dwelt in the wood, prevailed upon Yudhishtira that he allowed them to partake of the tīrthayātrā. Just when they were about to start, Vyāsa, Parvata, and Nārada came to Kāmyaka, and caused them not only to fulfil human vows by purifying the body, but even divine vows by purifying the heart, that it might be free from evil thoughts and harbour only friendly feelings towards everybody. When those celestial and human ṛshis had performed the usual propitiatory ceremonies, and when they had worshipped the feet of Lomaça, Dvaipāyana, Nārada, and the devarshi Parvata, the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa started towards the east with Dhaumya and the ascetics on the day following Mārgaśīrṣi, when Pushya was in ascendance, dressed in bark and hides, with matted locks, cased in mail, and armed with swords, etc., with Indrasena and other attendants with some fourteen (paricaturdaśaiḥ) chariots and a number of cooks (III, 93). As Yudhishtira asked why he who is virtuous is unhappy, and his enemies who are sinful, happy, Lomaça said that sinful men often prosper in consequence of their sins, but at last they are overtaken by destruction, even as in the devayuga the Daityas and Dānavas (Asuras), who practised vice (adharma) and did not visit the tīrthas, for a time prospered by their sin and vanquished the gods, who practised virtue and visited the tīrthas; at last, when the good qualities, prosperity, etc., left the Asuras and went to the gods, while bad qualities, adversity, etc., came to the Asuras, and Kali possessed them, they were overtaken by destruction. Nṛga, Çibi Auçmāra, Bhagīratha, Vasumanas, Gaya, Puru, and Pururavas had by practising ascetic penances and visiting tīrthas, etc., obtained fame and wealth, etc., and so would Yudhishtira, and as Iksvaku with his sons, etc., and Mucukunda, Māndhātṛ, and Marutta, and the gods and devarshis obtained fame by the power of asceticism, so would Yudhishtira, while the Dhṛtarāshṭras, enslaved by sinfulness and ignorance, soon would be exterminated (III, 94).—§ 379: The Pāṇḍavas with their followers, proceeding from place to place, at last arrived at Naimisha, and thence to the Gomati, etc. (enumeration of tīrthas visited).—§ 380: Brahmasaras (q.v.).—§ 381: Gaya (q.v.).—§ 382: Thence they came to the hermitage of Agastya, and dwelt in Durjaya (i.e. Manimati, the city of Valāpi, Nil.); there asked by Yudhishtira Lomaça told: Agastyopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 383: Description of the Gaṅgā (b). Then, having at the suggestion of Lomaça, with his brothers and Kṛṣṇa, bathed in Bhṛgoḥ tīrtham (c) and gratified the gods and Pitṛs, Yudhishtira blazed forth in brighter effulgence and became invincible. At his request Lomaça told Jāmadagnyatejohānikathana (b) (v. Rāma).—§ 384: Yudhishtira wished to hear the details of Agastya. Lomaça related: Agastyopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 385: At the request of Yudhishtira Lomaça related how Agastya had caused Vindhya (q.v.) to cease to increase (§ 385), how Agastya drank up the Ocean (§ 386, cf. Agastyopākhyāna), Sagara (§ 387), Asamañjas (§ 388), Gaṅgāvataraṇa (§ 389).—§ 390: Then Yudhishtira proceeded to the rivers Nandā and Aparanandā and the Hemakūṭa (b, cf. Rakhabhākūṭa) mountain. Having, at the command of Lomaça, bathed in Nandā, they proceeded to the river Kauçiki (c) with the hermitages of Viśvāmitra and of Kaśyapa, the father of Rṣhyaçṛṅga (d).—§ 391: At the request of Yudhishtira Lomaça told the history of Rṣhyaçṛṅga (q.v.).—§ 392: Starting from Kauçiki, Yudhishtira in succession repaired to all the sacred shrines (āyatanāni) and came to the sea where the Gaṅgā falls into it, and bathed in the centre of 500 rivers. Then they proceeded by the shore of the sea towards the Kalinga country. Lomaça said: "Here is the river Vaitaraṇi (b)." When they had all bathed in the Vaitaraṇi, Yudhishtira felt as if he were carried off from the region of men, and behold all worlds, and heard the reciting of Vaikhānaśas, whom Lomaça declared to be at the distance of 300,000 yojanas. Lomaça ordered him to be silent, as this was the divine forest of Svayambhu (Svayambhuvo vanam) (c); taught by Lomaça the words to be recited (Oṃ namo viçva-guṇāyā, etc. [a]) Yudhishtira mounted the altar of Kaśyapa and bathed in the sea; then he went to the Mahendra mountain and spent the night there (III, 114).—§ 393: Lomaça told Yudhishtira the names of the ascetics (Bhṛguḥ, Āṅgiras, Vasishtha, Kaśyapa), and he, with his brothers, paid a visit to them. Akṣatavaraṇa, a follower of Rāma Jāmadagnya, told him when Paraçu-Rāma (q.v.) appeared, and that the following day was the 14th.—§ 394: At the request of Yudhishtira, Akṣatavaraṇa (b) related the story of Arjuna Kṛtāvīrya (q.v.), and Jāmadagni (q.v.), and Paraçurāma (q.v.) (§§ 394-8) — § 399: Mahendrācala-gamana (q.v.). — § 400: On their journey to the tīrthas they bathed in a holy stream, and thence reached to Godāvarī and to the sea (in the Draviḍa country); then to Agastyatīrtha and the Nārī-tīrthas, where they heard of and praised the deed of Arjuna, and gave away thousands of cows, and by and by they reached Çūrpāraka (C. Sūrp°), where they saw the altar of Ṛcika's son surrounded by crowds of ascetics, and the shrines of the Vasus, of the hosts of the Maruts, of the Açvins, Vairavata, Āditya, Dhanegcara, Indra, Vishnu, Savitṛ, Bhava, Candra, Divākara, and of the lord of waters, and of the host of Sādhyas, of Dhātṛ, of the Pitṛs, of Ṛcitra with his host, of Sarasvatī, of the host of Siddhas, etc., and then returned to Çūrpāraka, and from this tīrtha at the sea they came to Prabhāsa, where they offered libations to the Pitṛs and gods, and where Yudhishtīra practised austerities for twelve days, subsisting upon air and water, and performing ablutions day and night, surrounded by fires kindled on all sides. There came to them Balarāma, Kṛṣṇa, Çāmba, etc., Kāṛṣṇi, the grandson of Çini, and other Vṛṣṇis, and heard what had happened to them, and wept when they saw the Pāṇḍavas so exceedingly lean (III, 118). — § 401: Bala-Rāma (q.v.). — § 402: Sātyaki, citing Çaibya, etc., who did the work for Yayāti, recommended that Rāma, Kṛṣṇa, Pradyumna, Çāmba (b), himself, Aniruddha, Gada, Ulmuka, Bāhuka, Bhānu, Nītha, the young hero Niçathu, Sāranya, and Cārudeśhna should lead the united army of the Vṛṣṇis, Bhojas, Andhakas, Sāttvatas, and Çaras (C. Su°) against the Dhārtarāshtras and kill them in battle, and that Abhimanyu should rule the earth until Yudhishtīra had fulfilled his vow. Kṛṣṇa said that the Pāṇḍavas would never accept the sovereignty unless it were won by their own prowess, and Yudhishtīra assented to the words of Kṛṣṇa, saying, that as Kṛṣṇa alone knew him, so he alone knew Kṛṣṇa, who would perceive when the time had come for bravery, and he and Sātyaki would then defeat Suyodhana. Then the Yādus returned home, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey accompanied by Lomaça, and came to the river Payoshnī (c). — § 403: Lomaça spoke of sacrifices that had formerly been performed at the Payoshnī (b); he who bathed in the Payoshnī would obtain the same lokas as Gaya. — § 404: Having bathed in the Payoshnī they went to Vaidūryaparvata and Narmadā, where they, according to the exposition of Lomaça, visited all the tīrthas and shrines, giving gifts to the brahmins by 'hundreds. Lomaça said that this was the junction between the Tretā and Dvāpara age, where a person is freed of all his sins, and that here was performed the sacrifice of Çaryāti (b). Yudhishtīra wished to hear more about it (III, 121). — § 405: Sukanyopākhyāna (q.v.). — § 406: Lomaça recommended to Yudhishtīra to visit the above-named lake, and Sikatāksha, and the Saindhava wood, and Pushkara (reciting the hymns of Sthānu, this being the junction of the Dvāpara and Tretā, etc.), and Ārcikaparvata (b). Here the ṛṣhis eat rice boiled in milk. Here (?) is the Yamunā, where Kṛṣṇa performed austerities; there is the holy spring of Indra, where Dhātṛ, Vidhātṛ, and Varuṇa rose upwards. In the Yamunā Māndhātṛ and Somaka Sāhadevi performed sacrifices (III, 125). — § 407: Māndhātṛupākhyāna (q.v.). — § 408: Jantūpākhyāna (q.v.). — §§ 409-10: Plakṣāvataraṇa-gamana (q.v.). — § 411: Çyenakapotīya (q.v.). — § 412: When they arrived at the hermitage of Çvetaketu (b) (who, with his sister's son Ashvavakra, was the best in that yuga of those conversant with the sacred lore (brahmakṛtām), where Çvetaketu beheld the goddess Sarasvatī in her human shape and spoke unto her, "may I be endowed with the gift of speech," Lomaça related: Ashvavakṛīya (q.v.). — § 413: Lomaça pointed out to Yudhishtīra Samāṅga [or] Madhuvila, where Indra, after the slaughter of Vṛtra, became purified from all sins, Kardamila, Maināka (cf. Āditi), the Kanakhala mountains, Gaṅgā, the lake Punya, the mountain Bhṛgutulāga, Ushnigāṅga (PCR. Tu°), the hermitage of Sthūlaçiras, and that of Raibhya (b). — § 414: Questioned by Yudhishtīra, Lomaça related the Yavakṛitopākhyāna (q.v.). — § 418: They had soon passed the mountains Uçirabija, Maināka, Çveta, and Kālāçaila, and saw the seven-fold Gaṅgā (b). Here was the playground of the gods marked with their footprints (caranāṅkitam). Now they should proceed to the mountains Kālāçaila, Çveta, and Mandara (c); protected by Kubera, etc., and by Yātudhānas, these mountains are difficult to ascend. There are also other followers of Kubera, cruel and friendly (raudra maitṛas ca) Rākṣasas. Description of Kailāsa (d). Lomaça asked Varuṇa, Yama, Gaṅgā ("the daughter of the mountain", v. 10836), Yamunā, the mountain, the Maruts, the Açvins, the rivers to vouchsafe Yudhishtīra safety from gods, Asuras, and Vasus, and the mountains. Yudhishtīra recommended them all to practise here the utmost cleanliness, and asked Bhīma to protect Kṛṣṇa, who, in times of danger, even if Arjuna were present, ever sought protection from Bhīma (III, 139). — §§ 419-23: Gandhamāduna-praveça (q.v.). — § 424: Bhīma-kadalī-khaṇḍa-praveça (q.v.). — §§ 425-6: Hanūmad-Bhīma-saṃvāda (q.v.). — § 427: Tretā-yuga (q.v.). — § 428: Dvāpara-yuga (q.v.). — § 429: Kali-yuga (q.v.). — § 430: Hanūmad-Bhīma-saṃvāda (q.v.). — §§ 431-4: Saugandhikāharāṇa (q.v.).

The Asuras had three cities in heaven: one of iron (belonging to Vidyumālīn), one of silver (belonging to Tārakākṣha), and one of gold (belonging to Kamālākṣha); Indra could not vanquish them; the gods repaired to Rudra and promised him the creatures slain in every sacrifice. Çiva then made Gandhamādana and Vindhya the two bamboo poles of his chariot, the earth his chariot, Çeṣha the akṣha, the moon and sun the two wheels, Elāpatra and Pushpadanta the two pins of the yoke, the Malaya mountain the yoke, Takṣaka the string for tying the yoke to the pole, and the creatures (sattvāni) the traces of the steeds, the four Vedas his four steeds, the Upavedas the bridle bits, Gāyatrī and Sāvitrī the reins, om the whip (pratoda), Brahmān the driver, Mandara the bow, Vāsuki the bowstring, Vishṇu the shaft, Agni the arrow-head, Vāyu the wings of the shaft (so Nīl.), Yama Vairavata the feathers in its tail, lightning the whetting stone, Meru the standard. Adored by gods and ṛshis he adopted a posture called after his own name, and stood immovable for 1000 years. When, however, the three cities came together in the firmament he shot that terrible shaft of three knots, inspired with the Yuga fire and composed of Vishṇu and Soma. While the triple city began to burn, Pārvatī repaired thither to behold the sight; she had on her lap a child having a bald head with five tufts of hair on it; Indra endeavoured to strike the child with the thunderbolt, but Mahādeva (i.e. the child) paralysed his arm. Indra, with the gods, repaired to Brahmān, who, understanding that it was Çiva, came with them and recited a hymn (100). Mahādeva became gratified, and the arm of Indra reassumed its natural state: VII, 202, 9570 (Çya radhārthāya).—§ 606 (Tripurākhyāna): VIII, 33, 1415, 1416; 34, 1551, 1562, 1566, 1567, 1569 (the destruction of T. by Çiva is anew related, cf. § 603d).—§ 730g (Upamanyu): XIII, 140, 798 (*vināśa . . . Tripuraghna, Tripuraghātin, Tripuraharta = Çiva, q.v.

[Tripurākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Tripura"). § 606 (Karnap.). The first combat between the gods and the Asuras was about Tāraka (Tārakamayah). The Daityas were defeated. Then the three sons of Tāraka (Tārakāksha, Kamalāksha, and Vidyumnālin), by practising austerities, obtained boons from Pitāmaha (who refused to give them immunity from death): "residing in three cities, we will rove over the earth; after 1000 years we will come together, and our three cities also will become united into one; that foremost one amongst the gods who will, with one shaft, pierce those three cities united into one will be the cause of our destruction." The great Asura Maya (Viçvakarmānam ajaram Daitya-Danara-pūjitaṃ) constructed the three cities: Tārakāksha's of gold in heaven, Kamalāksha's of silver in the welkin, and Vidyumnālin's of iron on the earth; all in such a way as to revolve in a circle; each 100 yojanas in breadth and 100 in length (description). Those three Daitya kings (Dānava) soon assailed the three worlds, and millions upon millions of flesh-eating Dānavas, who had before been defeated by the gods, came to them and settled in the three cities; Maya supplied them with everything by his illusive power. Tārakāksha's heroic son Hari, by penances, obtained from Brahmān a boon: a lake in his city capable of reviving the dead when thrown into it. They then exterminated all cities and towns, drove the gods from all places, and roamed over celestial forests, etc., and the asylums of R. Indra, with the Maruts, having tried in vain to pierce the three cities, repaired with the gods (Ādityas) to Brahmān, complaining of the Asuras. Brahmān said that no one else, save Sihānu (Īçāna, Jishṇu, i.e. Çiva), could pierce the three cities with one shaft. They all, with Brahmān and R. (devoted to penances and uttering the eternal words of the Vedas), sought Bhava (Çaṅkara, i.e. Çiva), who had perfect knowledge of the Soul, beholding in him those diverse forms that each had individually conceived in his own heart, and praised him (α) (VIII, 33). After the fears of P., D., and R. had been dispelled, Brahmān explained the matter to him. He said that they should fight united and with half his energy; as they said that they could not bear half his energy, he promised to slay the foes endued with half of their united energy. From that time Çaṅkara came to be called Mahādeva. Gathering portions from all forms in the three worlds they let Viçvakarman construct him a chariot; they made Vishṇu the point, Soma the head, and Agni the staff of the arrow; Earth the chariot; Mandara its axle; Gangā its janghā; the points of the compass its ornaments; the constellations its shaft; the Kṛta-nge its yoke; Vāsuki its kūbara; Himavat and Vindhya its apaskara and adhishṭhāna; the Udaya and Asta mountains its wheels; the Ocean (the abode of the Dānavas) its other axle; the seven R.'s its pariaṅkara; Day and Night, etc., its annakaraha; the planets and the stars its wooden fence; dharma, artha, and kāma its triveṇu; the herbs and the creepers, etc., its bells; the sun and moon were made its [other] wheels; Day and Night its wings; the ten foremost of Snakes Dhṛtarāshṭra, etc., its [other] shaft; the sky its [other] yoke; the clouds Samvartaka and Balāhaka the leathern strings of the yoke; the twilight, Dhṛti, Medha, Sthiti, Sannati, and the firmament with planets and stars its covering-skins; the regents of the world (Indra, Varuṇa, Yama, and Kubera) its steeds; the cardinal and subsidiary directions its reins; Vashaṭkara the goad; Gāyatrī the string attached to the goad; the four auspicious days (v. the note of PCR., p. 112) the traces of its steeds; the P. (Rohakāḥ) presiding over them the pins; Action and Truth and Penance and Profit its chords; Mind the ground; Speech the truck; it was resplendent with lightning and Indra's bow; that space of time, which, on a former occasion, had, in the sacrifice of Īçāna, been fixed as a year, the bow; the goddess Savitṛī the bowstring; a celestial coat of mail was made, sprung from the wheel of Time; the golden mountain Meru was made its flagstaff; the clouds with flashes of lightning its banners. Çaṅkara placed upon it his own celestial weapons. Making the sky its flagstaff, he placed upon it his bull; Brahmadāṇḍa, Kūladāṇḍa, Rudradāṇḍa, and Fever became the protectors of the sides of the chariot; Atharvan and Āngiras the protectors of the wheels; the Rgveda, the Sāmaveda, and the Purāṇas stood in front of the chariot; the itihāsa and the Yajurveda were the protectors of the rear; all sacred Speeches and Sciences stood around it, and all hymns and Vashaṭkara; om in the van. Having made the year with the six seasons his bow, he made his own shadow (i.e. the Death-night, Raudrī kalarātri, Rudra being Kāla) the bowstring; Vishṇu, Agni, and Soma the arrow (v. supra); the universe is said to consist of Agni and Soma, and similarly to consist of Vishṇu, who is the soul of Bhava. Çaṅkara placed on that bow his wrath, the unbearable fire of anger, born of the wrath of Bhṛgu and Āngiras. The Wind (Çvasana) was caused to breathe fragrance. The great R., G., D., Aps. praised Mahādeva when he was about to ascend the chariot. He asked to get as his driver him who was superior to himself; the gods prevailed upon Brahmān to become his driver. The great R., G., D., Aps. praised Mahādeva after he had ascended the chariot. His bull uttered tremendous roars, so that many descendants and followers of Tāraka breathed their last. Frightful portents appeared. In consequence of the weight of Soma, etc. (β), the chariot seemed to sink. Then Narāyaṇa, issuing out of the point of the arrow, assumed the form of a bull and raised the chariot. Rudra, standing on the head of his bull and the back of his steeds, beholding the Dānava city, cut off the teats of the horses and clove the hoofs of the bull; from that date the hoof of the bovine species came to be cloven and the horses to be without teats. He had united the Paṇḍata weapon with the shaft. When the three cities became united, the D., Si., and great R. uttered the word Jaya adoring Mahāvara. When he had shot his arrow the cities began to fall down, and burning the Asuras, he threw them into the western ocean. The fire, born of his wrath, he quenched, lest it should reduce the three worlds to ashes. D., R., and the three worlds gratified Sthānu.

Tulādhāra, a merchant. § 680b (Tulādhāra-Jājalīsamv.) —XII, 262, 9277 (°aya vakyāni), 9284 (vaṇigdharmā), 9285, 9287, 9318, 9319, 9320, 9321, (9323); 263, 9339, 9342, (9344); 264, (9399), (9436), 9441; 265, (9442), 9462, 9463, 9465 (discourse between T. and Jājali).

[Tulādhāra-Jājalī-samvāda(h)] ("the conversation of Tulādhāra with Jājali"). § 680b (Mokshadh.). Bhīṣma said: There was once a brahman Jājali, living in a forest; he proceeded to the sea-shore and practised penances (description) for many years. Living within the waters he roamed through all the worlds with the speed of mind. Once, unseen by Ra., he thought: "there is none equal to me"; Pṇ. said to him that even the celebrated Tulādhāra

(engaged in buying and selling) was not worthy of saying such words. R. wished to see Tulādhara; Ra. raised him from the sea and showed him the road. Arrived at Vārāṇasī, he met Tulādhara and spoke to him thus (!). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma described those difficult feats that Jājali had performed before; while he stood as a wooden post rapt in yoga, a pair of kūṅga birds (catākān, v. 9317) built their nest on his head, laid their eggs there, their young ones came out, and only when the latter did not come back, even after a month, Jājali left that spot. Then he began to slap his armpits and proclaim loudly: "I have won great merit." Then an invisible voice in the sky said: "Thou art not equal to the wise Tulādhara at Vārāṇasī; even he is not fit to say what thou sayest." Jājali, filled with wrath and desirous of meeting with Tulādhara, began to roam over the whole earth, observing the vow of silence and passing the night at that spot where evening overtook him. After a considerable time he reached Vārāṇasī and saw Tulādhara engaged in selling miscellaneous articles (panyāni). Tulādhara stood up and saluted him, mentioning his dealings with the birds, etc. (XII, 262). Asked by Jājali, the vaigya Tulādhara discoursed to him upon the ways of morality; "in every creature that is endued with the five senses live all the deities, Sūrya, etc. (a); the goat is Agni; the sheep is Varuṇa; the horse is Sūrya; Earth is Virāj; the cow and the calf are Soma; the man that sells those can never obtain success . . . In days of yore many R. (and Yatis) rebuked Nahusha for having slain a cow (which is declared in the scriptures to be like unto one's mother) and a bull (which is declared to be like to the Creator himself); in order to purify Nahusha, however, they divided that sin in 101 parts, and converting the fragments into diseases, threw them among all creatures, but declared that they should not be able to pour libations in his sacrifice" (XIII, 263). Jājali said that Tulādhara's doctrines smacked of atheism, which the latter denied, discoursing on sacrifice, saying that brahmins, having given up the sacrifice ordained for them (i.e. Yoga), had betaken themselves to the performance of sacrifices that are for kshatriyas (i.e. all other sacrifices). "Instead of all animals the rice-ball is a worthy offering in sacrifices; all rivers are as sacred as the Sarasvatī, and all mountains are sacred; the soul is itself a tirtha; do not wander about on the earth to visit sacred places" (XII, 264). Tulādhara caused Jājali to summon the birds that had been reared by the latter; they made answer agreeably to the religion of ahimsā (Nil.). "Faith is the daughter of Sūrya, etc.," quoting a verse sung by Brahmān, exalting Faith; "the food of a liberal usurer is acceptable, but not the food of a miser; . . . want of faith is a high sin; faith is a cleanser of sins." After a short while, Tulādhara and Jājali both ascended to heaven. Many truths of this kind were spoken of by Tulādhara; Jājali, having heard his words, betook himself to tranquillity (XII, 265).

Udapāna, one or more tīrthas. § 370 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 84, 8088. —§ 615b (Baladevatīrthayātrā): Although the Sarasvatī seems to be lost there, yet, owing to the succulence of the herbs and the moistness of the land, holy persons know [that] the river [has an invisible current there] (IX, 35). There the great ascetic Trīta had lived and drunk soma in a pit where his two brothers had left him, and therefore were cursed by him. Requested by Janamejaya Vaiçampāyana related: In a former yuga there were three brothers who were ascetics: Ekata, Dvīta, and Trīta, like to Prajāpati, having by their tapas won Brahmaloka (Brahmalokajitāḥ), and being blessed with children. At last their father Gautama died, having passed a long life here. Those kings who had been his yajamānas continued to pay respect to his sons. Once, thinking of performing a sacrifice and having received animals from their yajamānas, those maharṣis came towards the east. Trīta was walking in front, Ekata and Dvīta in his rear, bringing up the animals. Ekata and Dvīta thought of taking the kine away and deserting Trīta. In the night they saw a wolf. Trīta ran in fright and fell into a deep pit on the bank of the Sarasvatī. Though hearing his wails of woe, his brothers deserted him. Trīta feared to die because he had not earned the merit of drinking soma, and in imagination performed a sacrifice, himself being the hotṛ and uttering the ṛcos, yajushes, and sūmans (description). Brhaspati prevailed upon the gods to go there lest Trīta should become angry and create other gods. Trīta duly gave them their shares with proper mantras; they granted him boons: that the gods should deliver him [from the well], and that he who bathes in that well shall have the end which is attained by persons who have drunk soma. At these words the Sarasvatī, with her waves, appeared within that well. Raised aloft by her, Trīta emerged and worshipped the gods. Meeting his brothers he cursed them, saying that they should become wolves and have for offspring leopards and bears and apes [Ulūkādūtāgamana-parvan(ōva)] ("the section relating to Ulūka's arrival as an ambassador," the 64th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Ulūkādūtāgamana). § 571. When the Pāṇḍavas had encamped on the bank of the Hiranyavati, the Kauravas also fixed their encampment. Then Duryodhana consulted with Karṇa, etc. (a), and sent Ulūka to the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas in order to irritate them still more, with insulting messages to Yudhiṣṭhira (the story of the wicked cat), Kṛṣṇa, etc. (β); before Arjuna he should mention the Kāmbhojas, etc. (γ), among his troops; "I know that the Gāṇḍīva is full 6 cubits long" (V, 160). Ulūka repeated the messages to the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (V, 161), and repeated his words to Arjuna once more; Bhīmasena and the rest became furious; Kṛṣṇa counselled Ulūka to retire in time; Ulūka once more repeated his words; they became still more enraged, especially Bhīma, who said that he would certainly drink Duhçāsa's blood; also Sahadeva, etc. (δ), gave him answers for Duryodhana; Sahadeva would slay Ulūka before the eyes of Çakuni, and then Çakuni himself (V, 162). Arjuna said that Duryodhana's contrivance of seeking cover behind Bhīṣma would be of no avail, as he would himself slay Bhīṣma; the same said Çikhaṇḍin ("I have been created by the Creator for the destruction of Bhīṣma"); Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna would slay Drona with all his followers and friends. Ulūka related it all to Duryodhana. Messengers instructed by Karṇa promulgated: "array to-morrow before sunrise" (V, 163). Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna began to select combatants in order to pit them against particular warriors of the hostile force (e) (V, 164).

Ulūpi, daughter of the serpent king Kauravya, wife of Arjuna. § 11 (Parvasuṅgr.): I, 2, 397.—§ 248 (Arjunavanavāsap.): I, 214, 7788, [7791 (Nagarajasutām), (7793), 7793 (pannagī), 7810 (fell in love with Arjuna and took him to the palace of Kauravyu).—§ 785 (Anugitāp.): XIV, 79, 2309 (panna-gātmajā), 2311 (uragātmajā), 2312 (pannagātmajā); 80, 2342 (pannagasutām), 2343, 2348 (pannagātmajā), 2352, [2371 (nāgotlamasute), 2382, 2397, 2399 (Nagendrādūhita), 2401 (U. revived Arjuna).—§ 787 (Āçramavāsap.): XV, 1a, 23 (Nagakanyā); 105, 348.—§ 794 (Mahāprasthānikap.):

Umādhava, Umākānta = Çiva (1000 names²).

[Umā-Maheçvara-samvāda] ("the discourse between Umā and Çiva"). § 768b (Ānuçāsanik.): Nārada said: Once, Çiva on Himavat, the resort of Si. and Cā., practised severe penances, surrounded by Aps., etc. (a) (copious descriptions). Then came Umā (description) and with her hands covered the eyes of Çiva from behind, and darkness arose all around; but suddenly the darkness disappeared: a third eye appeared on his forehead and consumed the mountain; Umā stood before him with her hands joined; he directed benignant looks towards the mountain, which, in a moment, was restored to its former condition. Umā asked why his eastern, northern, and western faces are so handsome, and the southern so terrible (1); why his matted locks are tawny and erect (2); why his throat is blue (3); why he has always the Pinaka in his hand (4); why he is always a brahmācārī with matted locks (5). Çiva promised to explain it to her (XIII, 140). Çiva answered the above questions (1): "In days of yore Tilottamā, created by Brahmān (cf. I, ch. 211), circumambulated me; in whatever direction she turned, a new face of mine appeared through my yoga-power; with my eastern face I exercise the sovereignty of the universe; with my northern I sport with thee (i.e. Umā); with my western I ordain the happiness of creatures; with my southern I destroy all creatures. (2 and 5): In order to do good to all creatures. (3): In days of yore, Indra, desirous of acquiring my prosperity hurled his thunderbolt at me, which scorched my throat. (4): In order to accomplish the purposes of the gods." Umā: Why hast thou selected a bull for thy vehicle? Çiva: In days of yore, Brahmān created Surabhi (the celestial cow); once, froth fell from one of her calves on my body; my wrath scorched all the kine which became diversified in hue; Brahmān pacified me and gave me this bull both as a vehicle and as a device. Umā: Why dost thou reside in the cemetery (description), abandoning thy many abodes in heaven? Çiva: I do not see any spot that is more sacred than the cemetery, and my Bhātas love to reside in such spots. Umā: What are the indications of dharma? Çiva: Abstinence from injury, etc. Umā: What are the duties of the four castes? Çiva enumerated them. Umā: What are the common duties of all the castes? Çiva: Whenever the world is created, three eternal religions are created by Brahmān: the Veda, the smṛti, and the practice of the righteous, etc.; there are four classes of bhikṣus: kuṭṭhaka, bahūdaka, haṃsa, and paramahansa (each in turn being superior to the preceding one; v. Nil.). Umā: What is the religion of the ṛṣis (munis)? Çiva: (1) the Phenapas always gather the froth from the amṛta that Brahmān drank at a great sacrifice. (2) The Vālakhilyas in the solar disc, adopting the practice of the birds, live by picking up grains (uṣṇa), clad in deer-skins or bark of trees; they are only as big as the joint of the thumb; they have burnt all their sins by severe penances. (3) The Cakracaras in the Somaloka, near to Pitrloka, live by gleanings [differently

Nil.], devoted to compassion. (4) The Samprakhālas, Açmakuffas, and Dantolākhālikas [v. Nil. and the note of PCR., p. 642], near the gods [called] Somapas and Uṣmapas (C. U^o), live by gleanings ["drinking the rays of Soma," PCR.], together with their wives, etc. (Çiva copiously described the religion of the ṛ. in general) (XIII, 141). Umā: What is the religion of the Vānaprasthas? Çiva described it (vīrasana, maṇḍuka-yoga, paurṇamāsya, cāturmāsya, etc.); they attain to Brahmaloka or Somaloka. Umā: What is the religion of the munis (munisaṅghas) in their doctrines of perfection (siddhivādesu; i.e. jñānagoṣṭhikāsu, Nil.; "followers of the scriptures treating of ascetic success," PCR.)? they live unrestrained in the forest, together with their wives. Çiva: Their characteristics are the shaving of the head, yellow robes, passing the night at home, ablutions three times a day, hotra, samādhi, adherence to the path of the good, etc. All those duties of which I have spoken before as belonging to forest-recluses, are the duties of these also, etc. (copious description). Asked by Umā, Çiva said: By fasts, etc., one attains to heaven and sports with G.; by maṇḍukayoga and ḍikṣā with the Nāgas; by living with deer, etc., one attains to Amarāvati; by subsisting upon air or water, fruits and roots, one attains to the riches of Y. and sports with Aps.; by abandoning one's body in the ocean, having lived in dependence only of himself, etc., one attains to the world of Varuṇa; by the same practices and piercing one's feet with a stone, one rejoices with the Gh., others obtain Brahmaloka (having abandoned their bodies in fire as an oblation to the gods), Çakraloka, etc. (XIII, 142). Asked by Umā, Çiva expounded the circumstances under which one may be promoted or degraded to a higher or lower order when reborn (XIII, 143). Asked by Umā, Çiva (worshipped by D. and As.) discoursed as to how men succeed in ascending to heaven, and what words, thoughts, and acts are of importance in this respect and for acquiring a long life. "This is the way that was indicated by Brahmān himself" (XIII, 144). Asked by Umā, Çiva discoursed about that conduct by which a man may attain to heaven (Aps., the woods of Nandana), quoting Brahmān; the unmerciful, etc., sink into hell; they who humiliate their preceptors and seniors are reborn as Çvapakas and Pukkasas. Then (asked by Umā) he explained why some men become possessed of wisdom or the contrary, blind, diseased, etc.; what acts are faulty, and what faultless; why some are observant of vows, some like Rā. (Brahma-rākṣasas) in conduct, unmindful of homa and śaṣṭakāra (XIII, 145). Nārada said: Now Çiva himself became desirous of hearing. Saying that Umā (acquainted with all duties, etc.) used to converse every day with Savitṛī, etc. (γ), who all regard their husbands as their gods, he questioned Umā about the duties of women; "half of my body is made up of half thy body; thou . . . art the cause of the peopling of the earth." Umā said she would first consult the rivers, who, with the waters of all tīrthas, are approaching Çiva in order to enable him to perform his ablutions: Sarasvatī (the first of all streamers), going to the ocean, etc. (δ). Gaṅgā was selected for answering the question, and praised Umā's modesty; then Umā discoursed upon the duties of women in full. She should not cast her eyes on the moon or the sun or a tree that has a masculine name. The husband is the god of the woman. If a husband being poor, or diseased, or distressed, etc., were to command his wife to accomplish anything improper or unrighteous, the wife should, without hesitation, do so according to the practice allowable in time of distress, and she becomes entitled to a share in the merit acquired by her husband. Nārada said: Çiva applauded Umā and dismissed the others; Bh., etc. (a), returned home (XIII, 146). Asked by R., Çiva discoursed on the glory of Vasudeva, i.e. Kṛṣṇa, q.v. (XIII, 147). Nārada said: At the conclusion of Çiva's speech loud roars were heard in the firmament, etc. Some of R. set out on a tīrthayātra, others returned whence they came.

uñchavṛtti ("one who lives by gleanings"): III, 15407 (gilo°); XII, 13918 (°orate); XIV, 2695 foll.

[Uñchavṛtṭy-upākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to the gleaner"). § 718b (Mokshadh.): Bhīṣma said: M-ṛ Nārada wanders through all the worlds like Vayu, not obstructed by anything; once he repaired to the abode of Indra, who asked him if he had perceived any wonderful incident. Nārada recited the following story (XII, 353): In the town of Mahāpadma, on the southern bank of the Gangā, there lived a brahman of the Soma-lineage (Somānvaye, i.e. Atrigotra, Nil.), endued with amiability, etc.; he was in great trouble with regard to the value of following the ordinances of the Vedas, or the [Dharma]śāstras, or the duties that eminent men of former times have performed (çishṭhācārṇa). Then there came to him a wise brahman as a guest (XII, 354); him he asked what he, having entrusted his duties as a householder to his son, should do in order to perform the highest duty of men, as he had no respect for the religion of the Yatis, who depend upon alms. The guest said that he was himself perplexed, as heaven had many doors (examples) (XII, 355); he told him (according to what he learnt from his preceptor) to repair to Padma, the righteous Nāga, who lived in the city called after the Nāgas in the Naimishā forest, on the banks of the Gomati, whence, in a former creation (pūrvābhīṣarge) the wheel of righteousness was set in motion (dharmaçakram pravartitam), and where all the gods had, in days of old, performed a great sacrifice, and where king Māndhātṛ neglected (atīkramaṇ cakre) Indra (XII, 356). The host became delighted, and passed the night happily conversing with his guest about the fourth mode of life (caturthadharmā) [i.e. sannyāsa, renunciation, PCR.; = mokshadharmā, Nil.]; the next morning, having dismissed his guest, he set out for the abode of the Nāga (XII, 357), was shown the way by an ascetic, and received by the beautiful wife of the Nāga; as the Nāga had gone to draw the chariot of Sūrya for a month, and would be back in seven or eight days, he passed this time on the banks of the Gomati (XII, 358). On the 6th day the Nāgas of the city, seeing him abstaining from food and [only] reciting mantras, came and asked him to eat; but he wanted to keep his fast for eight days; if then the Nāga-chief had not come back, he would break his fast. Then the Nāgas returned (XII, 359). When the Nāga-chief came home, he was informed by his wife about the brahman's arrival (XII, 360). The Nāga doubted whether that brahman was a human being, as the Nāgas, even by D., As., and D-ṛ, are considered to be endued with great energy; his wife told him to go and speak to the guest without the wrath which is natural to Nāgas; the Nāga himself also blamed wrath, citing Rāvaṇa (who became the rival of Çakra and was slain by Rāma) and the sons of Kārtavīrya (who were slain by Rāma Jāmadagnya) and Kārtavīrya himself (XII, 361). The Nāga met with the brahman (who characterized himself as a righteous being (dharmaṛanya = muni, Nil.)) on the banks of the Gomati, engaged in Yoga and reciting the Vedas in order to dispel all evil from the Nāga (XII, 362); he asked the Nāga whether he had seen anything wonderful in those regions where he had drawn the one-wheeled chariot of Vicavati. The Nāga described the wonders of which the Sun is the source (a). The most wonderful was that one day, in former times, at the hour of noon, a being came through the sky like a second sun and entered Sūrya (XII, 363). Sūrya declared it to be a brahman, who had attained to heaven on account of his having been crowned with success (siddhaḥ) in the gleanings-vow (uñchavṛttivrate) (description), and because he had gratified Bhava (Çiva) by praising him with samhitāḥ, and now he "goes round the earth staying in the disc of Sūrya; neither D., nor G., As., nor Pn. are superior to those creatures that attain to this excellent end" (XII, 364). The brahman then betook himself formally to the practice of the uñcha-vow (XII, 365), and having saluted the Nāga, he went to Cyavana Bhārgava, who initiated him and recited the story of the brahman in king Janaka's palace to D-ṛ Nārada > Indra > the foremost brahman. "During my (i.e. Bhīṣma's) battle with Rāma, the Vasus told it to me." The brahman proceeded to another forest (XII, 366).

was sent to look after the kine. His master forbade him to enjoy the alms he received before he had offered it to him; then, being deprived by the master of the whole alms, and forbidden to go begging a second time, or to drink of the milk of the cows, or the froth that the calves threw out when sucking, he ate of the leaves of the arka plant (asclepias gigantea), whence he became blind and fell into a pit. Āyoda Dhaumya told U. to glorify the Ācṛins, which he did; they gave him a cake which he would not apply without offering it to his preceptor, though the latter had himself formerly obtained a similar cake without offering it to his preceptor. The Ācṛins gave him teeth of gold, while those of his preceptor were of iron, and restored him to sight: I, 3, ††697, ††698, ††700, ††704, ††708, ††711, ††717, ††718, ††721, ††739.

Upamanyu¹, Valyāghrapadya (^{Opāda} C.), a ṛshi. § 730 (Ānuśāsanik): XIII, 14, 634 (Valyāghrapādasya (^{Opadya}°, B.)), 655 (Kṛṣṇa came to the hermitage of U., who advised him to gratify Īiva; whose granting of boons he described).—§ 730g (do.): Upamanyu said: In the Kṛtavya there was a ṛshi named Vyāghrapāda. I was born as his son and Dhaumya as my younger brother. Accompanied by Dhaumya, I once came to the hermitage of certain ṛshis. There I saw milk, which appeared to me to be like to amṛta. Coming home, I asked my mother to give me some food prepared with milk. Having no milk my mother was sorry. She then took a cake (of rice) and boiled it into water and placed it before me, saying that it was milk. Knowing the nature of milk, I understood that this was not milk; this I said to my mother, who then answered me that ascetics in the wood could not have milk. "Whence shall we, who live at the river, the resort of the Vālakhilyas, obtain milk? In the wilderness are no offspring of Surabhi." Then she told me to devote myself to Ṣankara (i.e. Īiva). Questioned by me about Īiva my mother then, in accordance with the discourses of the *muni*s, described the diverse forms of Mahādeva (i.e. Īiva) (η). I then applied myself to the practice of penances in order to gratify Īiva. After a thousand celestial years Mahādeva appeared to me in the form of Ṣakra (i.e. Indra) riding on his elephant, but I did not desire a boon from any other deity than Mahādeva. Questioned by Indra about the reason, I stated Īiva to be the existent and the non-existent, the manifest and the unmanifest, the eternal and immutable, etc., and that there was nothing superior to Īiva (θ). Mahādeva resides in the worlds named Bhū, etc. (ι). In all the encounters of the gods, etc. (κ), Bhava restores power to those who meet with destruction. It is Maheṣvara who made futile the boons given to Andhaka, etc. (λ). He is adored by yogins, etc. (μ). Brahmān, etc. (ν), always say that there is none higher than Mahādeva. His sign (līnga) is worshipped by Brahmān, etc. The creatures bear only the signs of Mahādeva and his spouse, and those of Brahmān, etc. (ο). "I shall never acknowledge any other deity. Nor would I take the fulfilment of all my wishes from any other deity." When I had finished this speech, the celestial elephant became transformed into a white bull (description), on the back of which Mahādeva, with Umā, was seated (description of Īiva and his weapons: Pinaka (π)). The Pācupāta weapon is superior to all other weapons such as the Brahma, etc. (ρ), but the śāla (σ) is even superior. Īiva was also armed with the battle-axe, which he had given to Rāma Jāmadagnya (τ). He was surrounded by Brahmān, etc. (υ). The deities praised Īiva by uttering diverse hymns (φ). "I then praised him with a hymn (χ)

and offered him arghya (water). Īiva became gratified and granted me the fulfilment of all my wishes. I once more praised him (ψ) and asked that I and my kinsmen and friends might always eat food with milk. Īiva granted this, and that after the expiration of a kalpa I should obtain the companionship of Īiva. The foremost of those conversant with the Pāñcarātra (Pāñcarātravidāḥ) dwelled in his palaces. The seven ṛhis (β), named the Citraçikhaṇḍins, uniting together, had on Meru promulgated an excellent treatise on duties; they were the seven prakṛtis (i.e. mahat, ahankāra, etc., Nil.), and [Manu] Svāyambhuva was the eighth (i.e. original Prakṛti, Nil.); they composed that treatise after having worshipped with penances Hari Nārāyaṇa for 1,000 celestial years, together with many other ṛhis; Nārāyaṇa ordered Sarasvatī to enter into the persons of these ṛhis and become highly pleased with the treatise, which was in accordance with the Vedas, etc. (γ). Nārāyaṇa said: "According to the authority of the scriptures I have created Brahmān from grace, Rudra from my wrath, and yourselves as representing the prakṛti-elements. Sārya, etc. (δ) live and act in their respective spheres; guided by your treatise Manu Svāyambhuva will declare the duties to the world, and so will Uçanas and Brhaspati, when they will arise; then this science will be acquired by king Vasu [Uparicara] from Brhaspati; upon the death of that king this eternal treatise will disappear from the world." Then Nārāyaṇa disappeared. Subsequently, when Brhaspati was born in the Āṅgiras race in the Kṛta age, those seven ṛhis charged him with the task of promulgating their treatise, which was consistent with the Upanishads and the branches of the Vedas. Then they proceeded to the place they chose for practising penances (XII, 336). Etymology of the name Brhaspati. King Vasu Uparicara became the foremost of Brhaspati's disciples, and studied at his feet that science of the Citraçikhaṇḍins. In his horse-sacrifice Brhaspati became the hotṛ, the sons of Prajapati, viz. Ekata, Deṣita, and Trita, the sadasyas, together with Dhanusha, etc. (ε); no animals were slain in it; Hari became gratified and came and took his share, visible to Vasu, but invisible to the others. At this Brhaspati became angry and hurled the sacrificial ladle with violence into the skies, saying: "Here I place this as Nārāyaṇa's share, he shall take it before my eyes." Yudhiṣṭhira asked why Hari only took his share invisibly. Bhishma answered: King Vasu and his sadasyas sought to pacify Brhaspati, saying that none should feel anger in this Kṛta age, as Hari himself did not feel anger, and none could see him save he to whom he became gracious. Then the ṛhis, Ekata, Deṣita, and Trita (the mindborn sons of Brahmān) narrated that they had once undergone penances for thousands of years, to the north of Meru and on the shores of the milky ocean in order to behold Nārāyaṇa in his own form, then an incorporeal voice directed them to Çvetadvīpa on the northern shore of the milky ocean; the inhabitants there are devoted to Nārāyaṇa, etc. (description) and adore only one god. Arrived there they could see nothing, blinded by the splendour of the deity; they then, once more, set themselves to practise austerities for 100 years, then they beheld the inhabitants (description, they are conversant with the ordinances of the Pāñcarātra). An incorporeal being addressed them from the sky, saying that the god could only be seen by these white men, etc.: "do ye return, after the expiration of this Kṛta age when the Treta age comes (in the Vaivasvata manvantara) a great calamity will overtake the worlds, you shall then have to become the allies of the gods." Then Ekata, etc., returned. Hearing this Brhaspati brought the sacrifice to completion. King U ruled his subjects righteously, and at last, giving up his body, ascended to heaven. After some time he, through the curse of the brahmans, fell down and sank deep into the earth; but even then he, by reciting sacred mantras having Nārāyaṇa for their deity, once more ascended to heaven through the grace of Nārāyaṇa (XII, 337). Yudhiṣṭhira asked why king Vasu, who was so devoted to Nārāyaṇa, did fall from heaven and sink beneath the surface of the earth. Bhishma cited the old narrative of a discourse between the ṛhis and the gods. The gods once said to some brahmans that sacrifices should be performed by offering goats (aja). The ṛhis declared that, according to a Vedic ṣṛuti, by aja was to be understood seeds; "how can animals be slain in the Kṛta age?" Vasu was coming through the skies with his troops, etc., and was asked to be their judge. Having first ascertained what opinion was entertained by each of them, Vasu, moved by partiality for the gods, said that sacrifices should be performed with animals. The ṛhis became very angry, and cursed him to fall down from heaven and sink below the surface of the earth. He immediately fell, but at the command of Nārāyaṇa, Vasu's memory did not leave him. The gods came to his hole and said that he should have the vasor dhara (v. the note of PCr., p. 758) for his sustenance as long as he remained there. Then the gods and the ṛhis went away. Vasu began to adore Hari and to recite in silence those sacred mantras which had come out of Nārāyaṇa's mouth in days of yore, and worshipped him in the five sacrifices which are performed five times every day. Hari Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) then let Garuda take Vasu to Brahmaloka (XII, 338): XII, 336, 12712 (rājō°h); 337, 12764 (rājō°o Vasu°h), 12766; 338, 12834 (rājō°h), 12838 (rājō°m (!)), 12855 (rājō°h).

Uttanka (so B., C. mostly Uta°), a rāhi. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 364.—§ 17 (cf. Pausyap.): U. was the disciple of Veda; having resisted the temptations of the wife of Veda, he obtained leave to depart, but first wished to bring Veda some gratuity for his instruction, and having uttered this wish two times, he was ordered to procure the ear-rings of Paushya's queen for the wife of Veda. Having met with a bull (Airdvata) and a man (Indra) mounted upon it, he ate of the dung and drank of the urine (amṛta) of that bull, "as his master had formerly done." Coming to the abode of Paushya, he could not discover the queen before he had purified himself properly from the leavings of his last meal. He and Paushya cursed one another. Having obtained the ear-rings, U. returned to his master. On the road Takshaka, the king of the serpents, in the shape of a mendicant, stole the ear-rings and proceeded to Nāgaloka. Indra, with the thunderbolt, made a hole through which U. entered the Nāgaloka, where he hymned the serpents. He there saw two damsels (= Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ) sitting over a loom, weaving a fabric with black and white threads (night and day), further, he saw a wheel (= the year) with twelve spokes (= the months) turned by six boys (= the seasons), and then a man (Parjanya) mounted on a horse (Agni). At the injunction of the man U. blew into the anus of the horse, whence there issued flames of fire with smoke, which were about to consume the Nāgaloka.

Takshaka then gave back the ear-rings and U. was borne by the horse to his master's abode. His master explained to him all he had seen during his journey. U. then proceeded to Hastinapura and told Janamejaya, who had some time before returned victorious from Takṣaṣilā, to burn Takshaka, who had bitten Parikshit to death, and caused Kāçyapa to turn back without relieving Parikshit, at a snake-sacrifice: I, 3, 747 (°namānam), 748, 749, 753, 756, 757 (Uta° also C.), 758, 759, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 770, 771, 772, 773, 776, 778, 779, 780, 787, 789, 790, 791, 793, 796, 805, 815, 816, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 832, 833, (836), (840), 848, 849, 850.—§ 56 (Parikshit): I, 50, 1991 (raher U°sya, ac. parābhavam, all. to § 17).—§ 57 (Janamejaya): I, 50, 2014 (°sya priyam kartum, do.).—§ 474b (Dhundhumārop.): III, 201, 13491 (maharshih), 13492, (13494), 13504, (13505), 13507 (gratified Viṣṇu who granted him boons).—§ 476 (do.): III, 202, 13523, 13524, (13525); 203, 13546, 13550 (U. urged Bhṛhadāçva to slay Dhundhu, but Bhṛhadāçva directed him to Kuvalāçva).—§ 478 (do.): III, 204, 13589 (°āçramam), 13591 (°āçramā-bhūte, there Dhundhu had his abode), 13592, 13594, 13619 (U. accompanied Kuvalāçva when he set out to slay Dhundhu).—§ 784b (Anugītāp.): When Kṛṣṇa, on his way from Hastinapura to Dvārakā, had entered the desert, he beheld U., who enquired whether he came after having reconciled the Kurus and the Pāṇḍavas. Kṛṣṇa told him the matter; filled with wrath U. threatened to curse him; Kṛṣṇa warned U. (who had practised brahmacarya from the day of his infancy) against destroying his penances [by a curse] (XIV, 53). U. agreed that Kṛṣṇa should first tell him "that faultless adhyātma", and Kṛṣṇa explained his own identity with the creator and destroyer of all things. "R., V, Dui., Y., G., Rā., N., and Aps. have sprung from me; etc. Dharma, whose essence is compassion for all creatures, is my eldest-born offspring, and has sprung from my mind; I am Viṣṇu, Brahman, and Çakra (i.e. Indra)." He always acts as those beings in whose order he lives (XIV, 54). U. prevailed upon Kṛṣṇa to show him his eternal Vaiṣṇava or universal form, and praised Kṛṣṇa, who granted him the boon to have water wherever he wished for it (water being scarce in such deserts) by thinking of Kṛṣṇa. Once, when U. was wandering thirsty in the desert, and thought of Kṛṣṇa, he saw a naked Cāṇḍāla (mātāngu) all besmeared with dirt, surrounded by a pack of dogs, and carrying a sword, and bow, and arrows; from his urinary organs there issued copious streams of water; he invited U. to accept this water; U. refused and even censured Kṛṣṇa, the Cāṇḍāla disappeared. Kṛṣṇa came and said that the Cāṇḍāla was Indra, whom he had ordered to give amṛta to U. in the form of water, and that Indra at first had refused to do it, but at last had agreed on the condition that U. should accept it in that way. Kṛṣṇa ordained that on those days in which U. would feel a desire for water, there should rise clouds raining savoury water over this desert and that they should be named U.-clouds; even to this day such clouds shower rain on the arid desert (XIV, 55). Asked by Janamejaya about the penances of U., Vaiçampāyana related that U.'s preceptor Gautama, having permitted thousands of disciples to return home, was so pleased with the devotion of U. that he would not dismiss him, even after 100 years, and decrepitude overtook U.; one day when he threw the load of fuel he had fetched on the earth, one of his matted locks, white as silver, had become entangled with the load and fell on the earth; beholding that sign of old age, U. gave himself up to loud lamentations; the beautiful daughter of his preceptor, at the command of her father, sought to hold the tears of U. in her hands, but her hands seemed to burn with the dropping tears, and she was obliged to let them fall on the earth; the earth was unable to hold them. Asked by Gautama, U. explained the matter. Gautama permitted him to leave him; as U. spoke of the fee, Gautama said that he was already highly gratified and that if U. became a young man of sixteen years, he would give him his daughter in marriage. U. again became a youth and accepted the maiden. As he spoke of the fee to his preceptor's wife, Ahalyā said that she was already gratified. U., however, insisted, and Ahalyā then commanded him to bring her the celestial ear-rings which were borne by the wife of Saudāsa, who had [through the curse of Çaktri] become a cannibal. Gautama blamed Ahalyā that she had sent U. to the cannibal. Ahalyā said that she had done it unknowingly, and that Gautama would protect U. U. met Saudāsa in a deserted forest (XIV, 56). Saudāsa was of frightful mien, wearing a long beard smeared with human blood, and looking like a second Yama; he congratulated himself that he had met U. at the sixth hour of the day when he was in search of food; U. maintained that while one is employed for the sake of his preceptor, one should not be injured; at last they agreed that when he had brought his preceptor the ear-rings he should come back; Saudāsa told U. to go and see the queen Madayanti (near a forest fountain), as he could not himself see her at the sixth hour. Madayanti told U. to bring her some sign from her husband, as these ear-rings, when placed on the earth, would be stolen by the Nāgas, if worn by one who is impure from eating, they would be taken away by the Yakshas, and if the wearer fell asleep, the gods would take them away; "also the maharshis and the Rākshasas watch for opportunities for carrying them away; they always produce gold and shine brightly at night; they protect against hunger, and thirst, and fear, and he who wears them grows in size" (XIV, 57). U. came back to Saudāsa, who gave him a sign. When he had got the ear-rings, U. once more came back to Saudāsa, and asked him about the meaning of the mystic words he had caused him to say to Madayanti, as a sign. Saudāsa, referring to his own terrible condition in consequence of his being cursed [by Çaktri], said that he hoped that this gift to a brahman might save him. U. asked Saudāsa to give him such advice as is approved by the wise: "is it proper for me to come back to thee or not?" Saudāsa said that he would then tell him never to come back. When U., on his way to Ahalyā, having bound the ear-rings in the folds of his black deerskin, had proceeded for some distance he became afflicted with hunger and climbed a bilva-tree (egle marmelos), hanging his deerskin on a branch, while he plucked some fruits. Struck by some fruits the deerskin fell down, the knot was untied, and a serpent of Airāvata's race carried the ear-rings, holding them in his mouth, into an anthill. Filled with wrath, U. with his staff, pierced that anthill for thirty-five days, desirous of making a path to the nether regions; the goddess Earth became anxious; Indra came there in the disguise of a brahman afflicted with the sorrow of U., and told him that the regions of the Nāgas are thousands of yojanas distant; as U. did not desist, Indra united the latter's staff with his thunderbolt, and struck with the thunderbolt, the earth opened a way to the Nāgaloka

(e). U. entered the Nāgaloka, very cheerless; then there appeared to him a black steed with a white tail, whose face and eyes were of coppery hue. He told U. to blow into his anus, "which thou often didst at the retreat of Gautama in former days"; the horse turned out to be Agni; U. did as he was directed, a thick smoke enveloped the Nāgaloka, the Nāgas, headed by Vāsuki, gave U. the ear-rings, which he brought to Ahalyā (XIV, 58): XIV, 53, 1542 (munīśreshṭham), 1544 (brāhmaṇaśreshṭhaḥ), 1555, (1556); 54, (1563); 55, (1586), (1593), 1596, 1599, 1600, 1601, 1604, 1608, 1610, 1612, 1614, 1623 (meghāḥ), 1624 (do.); 56, 1625, 1628, 1628, 1630, 1632, 1638 (vipraṃ), (1640), (1645), 1653, 1656, 1657, 1660; 57, (1664), (1666), (1673), (1675), 1676, (1678), 1680, 1681; 58, 1692, (1699), (1701), 1721, (1723), 1730, 1734, 1737, 1746, 1750.—§ 784 (do.): XIV, 59, 1751, 1752. The Earth (Pṛthivī), knowing that that time had come, asked of him as a boon for [her son] Naraka, that he, possessed of the Vaishnavāstra, should become incapable of being slain by gods and Asuras. The boon was granted. From Naraka, the king of Prāgyotisha (i.e. Bhugadatta) got this weapon, that may slay even Indra and Rudra: VII, 29, 1284, [1285 (astram . . . Vaishnavam)].

[Vaivāhikaparvan] ("the section relating to the marriage of Draupadī with the Pāṇḍavas", the 13th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Vairāṣika.) § 237. Dhṛṣṭadyumna related what had happened: (Arjuna had large red eyes, v. 7175, and Kṛṣṇa had followed him, catching hold of his deer skin, v. 7177); from their conversation on military subjects, he concluded that they were the Pāṇḍavas, of whom it had been heard that they had all escaped from the lac-house. Drupada (= Saumaki, v. 7198) sent his purohita to Yudhishtira, who said that there was no occasion for Drupada to grieve for his daughter. While Yudhishtira was saying this, another messenger from Drupada announced that the feast was ready (I, 193). The Pāṇḍavas, with Kuntī and Kṛṣṇa were conveyed to Drupada's palace. Drupada wished to ascertain to which caste they belonged, and had for that purpose made ready a large collection of various articles appertaining to different human occupations; after dinner they began to observe, with interest, the implements of war, wherefore Drupada and his son thought that they were of royal blood (I, 194). Yudhishtira told Drupada who they were. Drupada vowed to restore Yudhishtira to his kingdom. Yudhishtira told him that they would all marry Kṛṣṇa, which Drupada considered to be contrary to morality. While they discoursed on this matter Vyāsa arrived (I, 195). Drupada consulted Vyāsa about the wedding of his daughter. Vyāsa desired to hear the opinion of each of them. Drupada regarded the practice of marrying one wife to five men as sinful, and so did Dhṛṣṭadyumna. Yudhishtira thought it not to be sinful, because his heart, that never inclined to what was sinful, approved of it; "it is recorded in the Purāṇa that Jatila Gautamī had married seven śhis, and a muni's daughter, born of a tree (Vārkaśi [= Mārisha, BR.], see Hariv., v. 96 foll.) married the ten Prucetasas"; moreover, their mother Kuntī had told them to enjoy her all. Kuntī was afraid that she would be guilty of a lie. Vyāsa said that Yudhishtira was right, and took Drupada apart (I, 196) and related to him Pañcendropākhyāna (§§ 238–239).—§ 240. Drupada then consented, as it had been ordained by the gods. Vyāsa declared that very day to be auspicious as the moon entered in conjunction with Pushya (Paushyam yogam upaiti). Drupada and his son made preparations for the wedding, and Dhaumya, performing the usual rites, married Kṛṣṇa to Yudhishtira, and then to his brothers on successive days. Draupadī regained her virginity every day after her previous marriage. Then Drupada gave to them various kinds of excellent wealth (I, 198). Drupada, after his alliance with the Pāṇḍavas, had all his fears dispelled. His ladies worshipped the feet of Kuntī. Kuntī pronounced a blessing upon Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa sent them costly presents (I, 199).

[Vaivāhikaparvan] ("the section containing the marriage of Abhimanyu and Uttarā"; the 56th of the minor parvans of Mbh.). § 553. On the third day the five Pāṇḍavas, attired in white robes after a bath, etc., entered the palace of Virāṭa and took their seats on the thrones reserved for kings. Virāṭa rebuked Kaṅka (Yudhishtira) for this insolence; Arjuna praised Yudhishtira, saying that there was none like him, even amongst D., As., men, Rā., G., Y., Ku., or M.-U., and disclosed that he was Yudhishtira (b) (IV, 70). Asked by Virāṭa which of them there was Arjuna, etc., Arjuna pointed out Bhīma (β), Nakula, and Sahasas (both beautiful and great warriors), Draupadī, and himself. Uttarā spoke of Arjuna's prowess, and described each of them, especially Arjuna ("it was by him that Bhishma, Droṇa, and Duryodhana were vanquished"). Virāṭa, thinking he had offended Yudhishtira, offered to bestow his daughter Uttarā on Arjuna, which was applauded by Uttarā, and offered his whole kingdom, etc., to Yudhishtira. Arjuna accepted Uttarā as his daughter-in-law, saying that such an alliance between the Mutayas and the Bharatas was desirable (IV, 71). Asked by Virāṭa why he himself did not wish to accept his daughter as wife, Arjuna alleged that she had confided in him as her father, and people might entertain suspicions against her or him; by accepting her for Abhimanyu he attested her purity. Virāṭa approved of it, and Yudhishtira gave his assent; the latter sent invitations to Kṛṣṇa, etc., and so did Virāṭa. The Pāṇḍavas took up their abode at Upaplavya. Arjuna brought over Abhimanyu and Kṛṣṇa, and many Daśārhas from the Anarta country. The Kāci-king and Çaibya (friendly to Yudhishtira) came, each accompanied by an akshauhini of troops; Yajñasena came there with the sons of Draupadī and Çikhaṇḍin, and Dhṛṣṭadyumna came with an akshauhini. All the kings that came there were lords of *akshauhini*s and performers of sacrifices, etc. Then came Kṛṣṇa (decked with garlands), Balarāma, etc., with Abhimanyu and his mother. And Indraena, etc., having lived at Dvārakā for a whole year, came with the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas. In the train of Kṛṣṇa came also 10,000 elephants, 100 thousands of horses, 100 millions of chariots, 100 milliards of foot soldiers, and innumerable Vṛkṣi, Andhaka, and Bhoja warriors. Kṛṣṇa gave to each of the Pāṇḍavas numerous female slaves, etc. Then the nuptial festival set in (description). The matrons of the Mutayas were headed by Sudeshnā; but Kṛṣṇa was the foremost in beauty, etc. Virāṭa gave [as dowry] 7,000 horses and 200 elephants, and much wealth, and offered his kingdom, etc., to the Pāṇḍavas. Yudhishtira gave all the wealth that had been brought by Kṛṣṇa, etc., to the brahmins (IV, 72).

[Vaiyasvatopākhyāna(m)] ("story of Manu Vaivasvata"). § 457 (Mārka.). Requested by Yudhishtīra, Mārkaṇḍeya said: The maharshi Manu, Vivasvat's son, equal to Prajāpati (i.e. Brahmān), excelled his father and grandfather in strength, etc. He practised austerities in Badari, standing on one foot, etc., for 10,000 years. Once a small fish came to him on the banks of the Çirīṇī and asked his protection from the greater fishes. He first reared it in a water vessel, and as it grew larger, he carried it to a large tank, and thence into the Gangā, and at last into the ocean. The fish, saying that the world was about to be destroyed, caused him to build a strong ship with a long rope and ascend it with the seven ṛshis and the seeds that were enumerated by the brahmins of old. The fish then appeared and was recognized by a horn, to which Manu tied the noose. And, while there was water everywhere, the fish dragged the boat through the flood for many years, until, advised by the fish, Manu tied the ship to the highest peak of Himavat, thence called Naubandhana. The fish told him that he was Brahmān, and caused Manu to create (again) by austerities all creatures with gods, Asuras, and men. This is the Matsyakam Purāṇam (III, 187).

Āstikap.): Çaunaka asked some questions on the omens foreboding fear (cf. § 44). Sauti related ("as described in the Purāṇa"): Once when Kaçyapa was sacrificing from desire of offspring, assisted by the r̥shis, gods, and Gandharvas, Indra, who had been appointed to bring the sacrificial fuel together with the V. and the other deities insulted the V., whose bodies were of the size of a thumb, all together carrying one single stalk of a pulāṇa leaf (butea frondosa), and much afflicted when sunk in the water collected in the footstep of a cow. The V. then sacrificed to effect that there should be another Indra. Indra repaired to Kaçyapa; he reminded them that Brahmān himself had made Indra the lord of the three worlds; the V. then declared that their effort had also been meant for the son wished for by him. Meanwhile Arjuna and Garuḍa were begotten and destined by Kaçyapa to become the brothers and helpmates of Indra (I, 31): I, 31, 1436, 1441, 1451, 1456, (1457), 1462.—§ 133 (Dushyanta): I, 70, 2863.—§ 134 (Viçvāmitra): I, 71, †2933.—§ 246 (Sundopasandop.): I, 211, 7683.—§ 270 (Brahmasabhāv.): II, 11, 437, 468 (raḥayaḥ, in the palace of Brahmān).—§ 310b (Sūrya): III, 3, 174.—§ 377 (Dhaumyatīrthak.): III, 90, 8381 (raḥibhiḥ, performed a sacrifice on the Sarasvatī).—§ 383 (Paraçurāma): III, 99, 8675 (raḥayaḥ).—§ 406 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 106, 10413.—§ 421b (Ākāṣa-Guṅgā): III, 142, 10903.—§ 602 (Droṇavādhap.): VII, 190, 3728.—§ 615h (Naimisha): IX, 37, 2166.—§ 615u (Skanda): IX, 45, 2510.—§ 641f (Pṛthu Vainya): XII, 59, 2232 (counsellers of Pṛthu).—§ 656 (Khadgotpattik.): XII, 166, 6143.—§ 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 245, 8903.—§ 717b (Nārāyaṇīya): XII, 349, II, 13564 (raḥin).—§ 726 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 10, 442.—§ 730 (do.): XIII, 14, 681 (disregarded by Indra, the V. gratified Çiva, who granted them that they should create a bird that would rob the amṛta from Indra, cf. § 45).—§ 730g (Upamanyu): XIII, 14, 713 (nadīm . . . V°air nishovitam).—§ 747b (Suvārṇotpatti): XIII, 85, 4124 (their origin).—§ 751b (Çapathavidhi): XIII, 94, †4551, (4585).—§ 761 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 115, 5604.—§ 768b (Umā-Maheçvarasamv.): XIII, 141, 6488 (°gane, B. °ganaiḥ), 6489 (sūryamaṇḍale), 6490 (description).—§ 775 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 166, 7639.

§ 461 (Mārkaṇḍeyas.). As Yudhiṣṭhira wished to hear about the greatness of brahmins, Mārkaṇḍeya related: King Parikṣit (B. Parikṣit), in Ayodhyā, of the race of Iksvāku, was, in the forest, led far away by a deer, and by a tank met with a beautiful maiden, who came along singing. He married her after having given her the pledge not to let her see, water, and having arrived at his capital he lived with her in privacy, and nobody could obtain any interview with him. His chief minister, having found out the matter, made an artificial forest, with a tank covered with a net of pearls, and showed it to the king. The king told his wife to plunge into this tank. She did so, and did not reappear. When the water had been baled out a frog was found. The king ordered all frogs to be slaughtered. Ayu, the king of the frogs, in the shape of an ascetic (quoting two *śloka*s: "Do not wish to kill the frogs, etc."), told him that the queen was his daughter Suśobhanā, who had deceived many kings. She was restored to the king, but Ayu cursed her, saying: "Thy offspring shall prove disrespectful to brahmins." Parikṣit begot three sons on her: Čala, Dala, and Bala. Having installed Čala on the throne, Parikṣit retired to the wood. One day, Čala, as he could not overtake a deer, forced his charioteer to indicate to him, to whom the Vāmya horses belonged. He borrowed them from the ṛṣhi Vāmadeva and caught the deer, but did not return them. After a month, Vāmadeva in vain sent his disciple Ātreya, and then came himself, and asked for the steeds. The king, saying that such horses were not fit for brahmins, in vain offered to give him two bulls, then four asses or four mules, and as he threatened to let him be killed, Vāmadeva, saying that brahmins could not be punished, let four Rākṣasas slay him with their lances. Dala, whom the Iksvākus installed on the throne, attempted to shoot Vāmadeva with a poisoned arrow, but shot his own son Čyenajit, and was unable to discharge another poisoned arrow. Then he gave way, and, advised by Vāmadeva, he touched his queen with the arrow and was thus purified of his sin. The queen obtained the boon from Vāmadeva, that she might prevail upon her husband that they both should serve the brahmins, and he be freed from his sin, and that Vāmadeva should think of their weal. The king became glad and restored the Vāmya horses (III, 192).

Vāsishtha(m) ("the episode relating to Vasishtha"). § 11 (Pārvasa): I, 2, 387 (°am ākhyānam).—§ 223 (Caitrar.). Arjuna wished to hear about Vasishtha. The Gandharva said: Vasishtha is Brahman's spiritual son and Arundhati's husband; Kāma and Krodha, who cannot be vanquished even by the immortals, used to shampoo his feet. Though his wrath was excited by Viçvāmitra's offence, he did not yet exterminate the Kuçikas. Afflicted at the loss of his sons, he did not do any dreadful deed for the destruction of Viçvāmitra. He did not transgress Kṛtānta (Death) in order to bring back his lost children from the abode of Yama. It was by obtaining him that the Ikshvākus acquired this earth, and with him as their purohita, they performed many great sacrifices. "Therefore acquire a fit purohita" (I, 174). Arjuna wished to hear of the hostility between Viçvāmitra and Vasishtha. The Gandharva said: This old (purāṇa) story of Vasishtha they tell in all worlds. In Kānyakubja king Gādhi, son of Kuçika, had a son Viçvāmitra, who, with his ministers, used to go a hunting. Once he arrived at the hermitage of Vasishtha, who offered him arghya, etc. from his cow Nandini, who yielded everything desired; Viçvāmitra asked Vasishtha to give him Nandini for an arbuda of kine or his kingdom, but in vain. Then he wanted to take the cow by force. She repaired to Vasishtha, who at first did nothing, saying, "I am a forgiving brahman"; but at last he said: "I do not abandon you! Stay if you can!" Hearing this word, the cow attacked Viçvāmitra's troops; from her tail she began to rain showers of burning coals; from her tail she brought forth Pahlaras, from her udders Drāviḍas and Çakas, from her womb (yonideçāt) Favanas, from her dung (çakṛt) Çabaras, from her urine Kāñcis, and from her sides Çarabhas (B. Çabarān and kūṇçeid instead of Kāñcin), and from the froth of her mouth Paṇḍras, Kirātas, Yavanas, Sīmhalas, Barbaras, Vaças (B. Khaçān), Çivukas, Pulindas, Cinas, Hānas, Keralas, and other Mlecchas, who attacked Viçvāmitra's soldiers. Viçvāmitra's troops fled, but none was deprived of life. Viçvāmitra then, disgusted with kshatriya prowess ("brahman prowess is true prowess"), set his mind on asceticism, and finally became a brahman and drunk soma with Indra (I, 176).—§ 224: Kalmāshapāda (q.v.)—§ 225. Vasishtha patiently bore his grief, and resolved rather to sacrifice his own life than exterminate the Kauçikas. He threw himself down from the summit of Meru, entered a huge fire in the forest, and tied a strong weight to his neck and threw himself into the sea, but all in vain, and, in distress of heart, he returned to his hermitage (I, 176). Beholding it bereft of his children, he left it again and tied himself strongly with cords and flung himself into a mighty river, but the stream cut those cords and cast the rishi ashore, whence that river was called Vipāçā. Once more he threw himself into a river flowing from Himavat (Haimavatī), but the river immediately fled in 100 different directions, and has since been known by the name of the Çatadru ("çatadhā vidrutā", v. 6753). He now again went towards his hermitage, and was on the way addressed by Adṛçyanti, the wife of Çakti, who had for twelve years borne his child in her womb. Hearing that child in the womb reciting the Vedas with the six Āngas, Vasishtha refrained from self-destruction, and, accompanied by Adṛçyanti, returned to his hermitage. One day he saw Kalmāshapāda, who would devour him; Adṛçyanti was terrified, but Vasishtha restrained him by uttering "hum", and, sprinkling him with water sanctified by mantras, and freed him from his curse that had lasted twelve years. Kalmāshapāda promised never more to insult brahmanas, and prevailed upon Vasishtha that he accompanied him to his capital Ayodhyā and begat a son for him on the queen. Then he went back to his hermitage. After twelve years the queen tore open her womb by a stone, and then was born the rājarekhi Açmaka, who founded the city of Paudanya (I, 177).—§ 226: Parāçara (q.v.).

Vasishthāpavāha ("the carrying away of Vasishtha"), name of a tirtha. § 615 (Buladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 41, †2357; 42, †2358.—§ 615p (do.): A great enmity arose between Viçvāmitra and Vasishtha, due to their rivalry in respect of ascetic austerities. The hermitage of Vasishtha was in Sthānūtīrtha, on the bank of the Sarasvatī; on the opposite bank was the hermitage of Viçvāmitra. There (i.e. in Sthānūtīrtha) Sthānu had practised penances, and having performed a sacrifice and worshipped the Sarasvatī he had established that tirtha, and there the gods in days of yore installed Skanda. In that tirtha on the Sarasvatī, the rishi Viçvāmitra, by his penances, disturbed Vasishtha. Viçvāmitra and Vasishtha every day challenged each other in respect of the superiority of their penances. Viçvāmitra ordered the Sarasvatī, notwithstanding her trembling, to bring Vasishtha into his presence, that he might slay him. Vasishtha willingly let her do so, lest Viçvāmitra should curse her. Sarasvatī washed away one of her banks and bore Vasishtha (who praised the Sarasvatī (q)) away and informed Kauçika (i.e. Viçvāmitra) about his arrival; but while Viçvāmitra was looking for a weapon she quickly bore Vasishtha back to the eastern bank. Viçvāmitra cursed her, saying that her current should be changed into blood, which is acceptable only to the Rākshasas. For a whole year she then flowed bearing blood mixed with water. The gods, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarasas grieved. For this reason the tirtha came to be called V. Sarasvatī, however, once more got back her own proper condition (IX, 42), when some munis on a tīrthayātrā to the Sarasvatī, having bathed in all her tirthas came to V. and saw the water mixed with blood, and that innumerable Rākshasas were drinking it. Having learnt the cause, they worshipped Mahādeva with penances and purified the Sarasvatī. The Rākshasas, who were Brahma-Rākshasas (so those among vaiçyas, çādras, and kshatriyas, who hate and injure the brahmanas, become Rākshasas), afflicted with hunger, sought the protection of the munis, who, having ordained what should be the food of the Rākshasas (v) solicited the Sarasvatī, who assumed a new shape called Arunā; bathing in that new river the Rākshasas abandoned their bodies and went to heaven. Ascertaining all this, Indra (s) bathed there and became purified of a grievous sin (i.e. brahmahatyā): IX, 42, 2398.

[Vasishthopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Vasishtha"). § 223 (cf. Caitrarūthap.). Arjuna asked: "Why did Kalmāshapāda command his queen to go to Vasishtha? And was this an act of sin on the part of Vasishtha?" The Gandharva said: Under the influence of the curse, Kalmāshapāda, in anger, went out of his capital, accompanied by his wife. In a solitary part of the woods he saw a brahman and his wife (Āngirasi, v. 6908) embracing each other. The couple ran away, but Kalmāshapāda forcibly seized the brahman. The brāhmaṇi asked him to liberate her husband, but he cruelly devoured him. The tears that the woman shed blazed up like fire and consumed everything in that place. The brāhmaṇi cursed the rājarekhi, saying that he should meet with instant death when cohabiting with his wife, and that his wife should have a son from Vasishtha, whose children he had devoured, and that child should be the propagator of his race. Then she entered the fire. Vasishtha, by his ascetic power, immediately knew all about it. And long after this, when the rājarekhi became freed from his curse, he approached his wife Madayanti, not remembering the curse of the brāhmaṇi. Hearing, however, the words of his wife, he recollected the curse, and, therefore, he appointed Vasishtha to beget a son on his queen (I, 182).

Vasu¹, surnamed Uparicara, king of the Cedis. § 73 (cf. Ādivaṃçāvatarāṇa). Instructed by Indra king V. won the kingdom of the Cedis. Some time after he dwelled in a hermitage practising austerities, from which the gods, headed by Indra, prevailed upon him to refrain. Indra gave him a crystal vimāna (chariot) capable of carrying him through the air like a god, and a triumphal (vaijayanti) garland named Indramālā, and a bamboo pole to protect the peaceful. After a year the king planted this pole in the ground in order to worship Indra (from that time all kings plant a bamboo pole, and the next day they cover it with golden clothes, etc.). Indra came there in the form of a swan to accept the worship, and blessed the men and kings who would observe this festivity: I, 63, 2335 (Paurava-nandanah), 2354, 2355, 2358.—§ 74 (do.): From the country of the Cedis V. ruled the whole world. He installed his five sons as governors of various provinces: Dhadratha (in the country of the Māgadhas), Pratyagra, Kuçāmba or Mañicāhana, Mavella, and Yadu; they founded kingdoms and towns, named after themselves, and created separate dynasties which lasted Kuuvaryān janayām āsu*, all. to § 171).—§ 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 375 (ya . . . rājya sampratipadanam).—§ 83 (Ādivaṃçāvātaraṇa): I, 63, 2441 (Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipayanād . . . kshetre V^oya, all. to § 171).—§ 156 (Pūruvaṃç.): I, 95, †3803 (V. and Citrāngada were the sons of Çāntanu and Satyawatī, cf. § 166), †3804 (unmarried Ambikā and Ambālikā, cf. § 167).—§ 157 (do.): I, 95, †3805 (died without offspring, cf. § 167), †3807 (Vyāsa begot children on the widows of V., cf. § 171).—§ 166 (Citrāngadop.): I, 101, 4069 (the birth of V.), 4078 (after the death of Citrāngada, V., who was still a child, was installed as king), 4079.—§ 167 (Vicitravīryoparama): I, 102, 4126, 4131, 4137, 4138, 4140, 4142, 4145 (V. married Ambikā and Ambālikā, but soon died of consumption).—§ 171 (Vicitravīryasutotpatti): I, 105, 4224 (o kshetreshu), 4240 (do.), 4253, 5254 (bhrātā V^oya, i.e. Vyāsa); 106, 4304 (Vyāsa begot Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu on the widows of V. and Vidura on the maid of Ambikā).—§ 213 (Jatugṛhap.): I, 145, 5744 (Çāntanavaḥ . . . rājaraṣiḥ); 151, 5906 (smuṣhāṇi V^oya, i.e. Kuntī).—§ 236 (Śvayamvarap.): I, 192, †7173 (ya sutasya, i.e. Pāṇḍu).—§ 290 (Çicupūlavadhap.): II, 41, 1455 (bhrātā V^o te, sc. Bhīshma's, all. to § 167).—§ 401 (Balarāma): III, 119, †10248 (ya sutaḥ, i.e. Dhṛtarāṣṭra).—§ 569 (Bhagavadyanap.): V, 147, 4978, 4979 (repetition from §§ 166–171).—§ 572 (Rathātīrathasāṅkhyānap.): V, 172, 5938 (all. to § 166).—§ 573 (Ambopākhyānap.): V, 173, 5947, 5948; 174, 5967 (repetition from § 167); 176, 6072 (do.).—§ 744 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 44β, 2441 (repetition from § 167, but with some alterations).—§ 787 (Āgramavāsap.): XV, 9λ, 283. Cf. Kaurava, Kauravya, Kurukulodvaha.

[Vicitravīryasutotpatti(h)] ("begetting of sons for Vicitravīrya"). § 171 (cf. Bhīshma-Satyavati-samvāda). Satyavati related to Bhīshma the birth of Deaipāyana (cf. § 77; from the darkness of his skin he is also called Kṛṣṇa (v. 4236)), who instantly came when Kālī (i.e. Satyavati) thought of him, and promised to raise offspring in the widows of Vicitravīrya. As there was no time for them to observe a rigid vow for one full year, he ordered that they should tolerate his ugliness. Satyavati first addressed herself to Kausalyā (i.e. Ambikā) and fed brahmanas, devarehis, and guests (I, 105). Ambikā, seeing Vyāsa, closed her eyes in fear; therefore her son, though he was destined to be mighty, etc., and to have 100 sons, had to be blind. After his (i.e. Dhṛtarāṣṭra's) birth, Vyāsa approached Ambalīkā, who became pale with fear; therefore, her son was pale and was named Pāṇḍu. Ambalīkā refused to receive Vyāsa again and sent him a çūdra maid of hers, adorned with her own ornaments; on her he begot Vidura, who was Dharma, born under the curse of Māṇḍavya. Vyāsa then disappeared (I, 106).

[Vicitravīryoparama(h)] ("death of Vicitravīrya"). § 167 (cf. Citrāṅgadopākhyāna). When Vicitravīrya had come of age, Bhīshma went to Vārāṇasī to the svayamvara of the three daughters of the king of Kāpi, and, in order to marry them to Vicitravīrya, he carried them off with force to Madhinapura (having defeated the other princes assembled, among these king Çālva, whom he conquered by means of the Vāruṇa and the Andra weapons, but at last he left him with his life to return to his capital). The eldest, Ambā, he let free before the wedding, as she declared that she, in her heart, had chosen the Saubha king (i.e. Çālva), and had been chosen by him. Ambikā and Ambalīkā he bestowed on Vicitravīrya. After seven years Vicitravīrya died of consumption (yakṣman) (I, 102).

Viçākha¹, a god, a son or form of Skanda. § 116β (Kumāra, v. [Viçvāmitropākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Viçvāmitra") : § 721b (Ānuçāsanik.). Bṛahma said: King Ajamūḍha (of Bharata's race) > king Jahnu (who got Gaṅgā for his daughter) > Sindhudvīpa (virtuosa) > R-r Balakāçra > Vallabha > Kuçika > Gādhi, who, being childless and desiring to have a son, repaired to the forest, where the beautiful Satyavati was born to him. Cyavana's son, Reika Bhārgava, asked for her hand; but as he was poor, Gādhi required of him as a dower 1,000 white horses having one black ear, which he obtained from Varuṇa (by thinking of them at Açratīrtha, on the bank of the Gaṅgā, not far from Kānyakubja). Reika granted her a boon, that she should have a son; she related this to her mother, who prevailed upon her to obtain a son also for her; having promised them both a son, he told the mother to embrace an açratīrtha tree and Satyavati an udumbara tree, and each of them to eat a certain caru (sacrificial offering), consecrated with hymns. The mother exchanged both the trees and the carus. Reika had placed the entire brahman-energy in Satyavati's caru and the kshatriya-energy in that of her mother; "therefore, thy mother will give birth to an excellent brahman and thou to a terrible kshatriya." Satyavati prevailed upon him, that not her son, but her son's son should be such. Then, by the favour of Reika, she gave birth to Jamadagni, and the wife of Gādhi to the Brahmarshi (real brahmarshi) Viçvāmitra, versed in the Vedas (brahmarādinam). Viçvāmitra attained to the state of a brahman, and became the founder of a race of brahmins. Madhucchanda, etc., (β), were all sons of Viçvāmitra (XIII, 4).

Vidulāputraçāsana(m) ("Vidulā's instruction of her son"). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 333.—§ 568 (Bhagavad.): The princess Vidulā one day rebuked her son Sañjaya, who, being defeated by the king of the Sindhu, was lying dejected. "Without wrath, as thou art, thou canst not be counted as a man . . . It is better to blaze up for a moment than to smoke for a long time . . . He who has not achieved a great feat, forming the subject of men's conversation, only increases the number of men; he is neither man nor woman . . . It behoves thee not to adopt the idle, wretched, infamous, and miserable profession of mendicancy that is worthy only of a coward . . . He is a man who cherishes wrath and does not forgive . . . (V, 133) . . . The followers of the Sindhu-king are all discontented and waiting for the distress of their master; others will come to thee with their auxiliaries if they behold thee put forth thy prowess . . . While thou wert a child, a brahman said: 'this one, falling into great distress, will again win greatness.' Çambhara has said 'there is not a more miserable state than that in which one does not see how to procure his food from day to day'. By slaying Vṛtra, Indra became Mahendra ("the great Indra"), and obtained the soma-cup of Mahendra (v. 4562, B.: Mahendram ca grahaṃ lobhe), and the lordship of all the worlds . . . Sovereignty is either the door of heaven or amṛta . . . In the possession of wealth, rejoice, as before, with the Sauvira-maiden, and be not ruled over by the Saindhava-maiden . . . Handed down by tradition from time immemorial, the eternal essence of kṣatriya-virtues (kṣatrahṛdayam) has been ordained by Prajapati himself . . . A kṣatriya should rather break than yield. He should bow down to *brahman*s only and to virtue (dharma); he should rule over all other orders, destroying all evil-doers" (V. 134). The son complained that the heart of his mother was made of steel, and blamed the kṣatriya-practices. Vidulā said that if Sañjaya was about to be stained by infamy and she did not say it to him, her affection for him would be like that of a she-ass for her young. He ought to have recourse to virtue and profit (V, 135) . . . "We have many treasure-houses unknown to thee . . . thou hast also more than one friend." Despair left Sañjaya's heart, though he was not gifted with great intelligence. He roused himself and achieved all that his mother had pointed out. Indeed, this history, named Jaya, should be listened to by everyone desirous of victory, etc. (V, 136).

Vidurāgamana(m) ("the arrival of Vidura"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 315 (aṃ parva, i.e. Vidurāgamana-parvan).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 362 (aṃ, do.).

[Vidurāgamanaparvan(°va)] ("on the arrival of Vidura", the 14th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Vidurāgama). § 241. The news had been reported to all the monarchs that Draupadī had been married to the sons of Pāṇḍu, whom they had thought burnt to death. They then set out for their own dominions. Duryodhana became greatly depressed, and, with his brothers, etc., he set out for Hāstinapura. Vidura was filled with joy, and related the news to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who first thought that it was Duryodhana who had been selected by Draupadī, but was very glad on hearing that it was the Pāṇḍavas. But Duryodhana and Karna tried to stir them up against them (I, 200). Dhṛtarāṣṭra said that he was of their opinion, but did not wish to inform Vidura of it; therefore he had applauded the Pāṇḍavas in Vidura's presence. Duryodhana suggested several plans for getting the better of the Pāṇḍavas (I, 201). Karna said that the plans would not succeed; he recommended to vanquish them by prowess, while their party was yet weak. Dhṛtarāṣṭra summoned Bhishma, Droṇa, and Vidura, and consulted with them (I, 202). Bhishma recommended to give to the Pāṇḍavas one half of the kingdom (I, 203). Droṇa approved of this, and, moreover, recommended that a messenger should be sent to Drupada with gifts, and say that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was very glad of the new alliance with him, and would take the Pāṇḍavas to Hāstinapura to be installed on the throne.—§ 242. Karna spoke contemptuously of Bhishma and Droṇa, saying that happiness depended on destiny, and not on friends, etc., mentioning the Magadha king Ambuṣṭa (b) (I, 204).—§ 243. Vidura recommended the suggestion of Bhishma and Droṇa, and said that the Pāṇḍavas were invincible, as they were assisted by Rāma, Janārdana, Sātyaki, etc. (I, 205). Vidura was sent by Dhṛtarāṣṭra with numerous jewels, etc., to Drupada and the Pāṇḍavas (also Aśvina was present). Vidura said that Dhṛtarāṣṭra was highly pleased with the alliance with Drupada, and asked Drupada to permit the Pāṇḍavas, with their mother and wife, to return to their paternal city (I, 206).

[Viduraparīnaya(h)] ("the marriage of Vidura"). § 179 (Sambhavarap.): Bhishma married king Devaka's daughter, who was by caste a pūrasarī, to Vidura, who begat upon her many children as excellent as himself (I, 114).

Vidūratha¹ (B., Vidūra), son of Kuru and Çubhāṅgī. § 156 (Pūruvamp.): I, 95, ††3792, ††3793 (husband of Supriyā and father of Anaṣṭan).

- [Vipulopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode about Vipula"): § 743b (Ānuçāsanik.). Bhishma said: There was, in days of yore, a R. Devaçarman; his beautiful wife Ruci fascinated every one who saw her, both D., G., and Dā., and particularly Indra. Devaçarman knew very well the disposition of women, as well as Indra's coveting other men's wives. Once, desirous of performing a sacrifice, he summoned his favourite disciple Vipula Bhārgava, and asked him, during his absence, to protect Ruci against Indra, describing to him the disguises that Indra assumes (a). Vipula, by his Yoga-power, entered the body of Ruci (description) (XIII, 40). Indra came, but Ruci was unable to move or to utter a word in reply; then, influenced by Vipula, she answered in Sanskrit (Praṇi saṃskārabhāṣaṇā) words that she did not intend to utter. Indra became perplexed, and when he with his spiritual eye discovered Vipula within Ruci, he became afraid that he might curse him. Vipula left the body of Ruci and returned to his own body which was lying near, and rebuked Indra, mentioning Gautama's curse, owing to which Indra's body became disfigured with 1,000 sex-marks, which, owing to Gautama's compassion, were afterwards changed into eyes, "see that thou dost not, with thy sons and counsellors, meet with destruction." Çakra, overwhelmed with shame, made himself invisible. A moment after, Devaçarman came back, and granted Vipula the boon that he should never swerve away from righteousness; dismissed by his preceptor, Vipula left his abode and practised the most severe austerities. Devaçarman also, with his spouse, began to live in the woods, perfectly fearless of Indra (XIII, 41). Vipula became full of pride. After some time the occasion came for a ceremony of gifts, with respect to the sister of Ruci—the Ānga-king Citraratha. Meanwhile, a celestial damsel dropped some flowers down to the earth; they were picked up by Ruci, who, adorned with them, went to the pulace of the Ānga-king. Her sister, Prabhārati, the Ānga-queen, urged her to obtain some for her, and Ruci informed her husband, who, summoning Vipula, commanded him to bring him some flowers of the same kind. Vipula found some such flowers still lying scattered, quite fresh, and set out for Campā; on his way he saw a human couple moving in a circle, hand in hand; a dispute arose between them, and at last, each of them took the oath "that one of us who speaks falsely shall, in the next world, meet with the end which will be Vipula's". Vipula became very sad; proceeding a little way he beheld six other men playing with dice made of gold and silver; they were heard by Vipula to take the same oath as the first couple. At last he recollected the manner in which he had acted in protecting his preceptor's wife (placing limb within limb, face within face), without telling his preceptor the truth. Coming to Campā, he gave the flowers to his preceptor (XIII, 42). Devaçarman, too, knew what he had seen on his way, and how he had acted in protecting Ruci; he explained that the first couple were Day and Night, the others the six Seasons. He absolved Vipula and ascended to heaven with his wife and his disciple. Mārkaṇḍeya had narrated this tale to Bhishma on the banks of the Gaṅgā (XIII, 43).

[Vitahavyopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Vitahavya"). § 736b (Ānuṣāsanik.). Bṛhatkṛmā said: While Manu, in days of yore, was righteously ruling his subjects, he obtained a righteous son Çaryāti, in whose race were born Vata's sons, the kings Haihaya and Talajāṅgha. Haihaya (or Vitahavya) had 10 wives and 100 heroic sons, who all studied the Vedas and Dhanurveda. In Kāci was king Haryaṇva, the grandfather of Divodāsa. The sons of king Haihaya (Vitahavya-dayādaiḥ) invaded Kāci and slew king Haryaṇva in a battle between the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā, and then went back to their own delightful city in the Vata-country. Meanwhile Haryaṇva's son Sudeva was installed as Kāci-king. The 100 sons of Vitahavya once more came and defeated him in battle, and then returned to their own city. After this, Sudeva's son Divodāsa became installed as Kāci-king; at the command of Indra he built the city of Vārāṇasī between the Gaṅgā and the southern bank of the Gomati. The Haihayas again attacked Divodāsa; he fought for 1,000 days, lost his army, left his capital, and fled away to the retreat of Bharadvāja, who was his priest, and performed a sacrifice, in consequence of which Pratardana was born to him. On the same day when Pratardana was born, he grew as great as a boy of 13 years, and mastered the Vedas and Dhanurveda, Bharadvāja (aided by Yoga) having entered into the prince and caused all the energy of the universe to enter his body (he was praised by sages and D-r., etc.; description). Divodāsa installed Pratardana as yuvarāja and ordered him to march against the sons of Vitahavya. Pratardana speedily crossed the Gaṅgā and proceeded against the city of the Vitahavyas and slew them all. King Vitahavya fled away to the retreat of Bhṛgu. Pratardana followed in his footsteps and ordered Bhṛgu to surrender king Vitahavya. Bhṛgu said: "there is no kṣatriya in this retreat; they who are here are all brahmanas." Pratardana returned home, and Vitahavya became a Br-ṛ. in consequence of Bhṛgu's statement. Vitahavya > Gṛtsamada (V-ṛ., resembling Indra and, therefore, once afflicted by Dai.; alleged quotation from the Rgveda) > Sutejas > Varcas > Vihavya > Vitatyā > Satyā > Santa > R. Çravas > Tamas > Prakāśa > Vāgindra > Pramati (B. °mi) > (mastering the Vedas and Vedāṅgas) > Ruru (begotten upon Aps. Ghṛtācī) > Çunaka (begotten upon Pramadvara) > Çaunaka (XIII, 30).

Vṛddhakanyā ("old virgin"). § 615 (Baladevatīrthayātrā): IX, 51, †2978.—§ 615u (do.): The ṛshi Kūṇi-Garga by penances created a fair daughter from his mind and then went to heaven. She worshipped the Pitṛs and the gods with fasts and practised penances in that solitary forest not wishing to marry, as she did not see a husband worthy of her. When she could no longer move, she set her heart upon departing for the other world. Nārada told her that she had no regions of blessedness to obtain, not having cleansed herself by the rite of marriage. She then went to a concourse of ṛshis, and said that she would give half her penances to him who would accept her hand in marriage. Gālava's son, the ṛshi Prakṛṣṇagavat, accepted her hand on condition that he should live with her only one night. On that night she became a young lady of the finest complexion, etc., and Gālava's son became very happy. At morn she said: "he that will, with rapt attention, pass one night in this tīrtha after having gratified the gods with oblations of water, shall obtain the merit of the vow of brahmacharya for 58 years," and then she departed for heaven. He soon followed her, moved by sorrow: IX, 52, 3003.

So it happened successively with light (colour and form), wind (touch) and ether (sound). Then V. suddenly entered Indra, who was then overcome with stupefaction (moha); Vasishṭha having restored him to consciousness by the Rathantara sāman, Indra in his own body slew V. with his invisible thunderbolt. This religious mystery was recited by Indra to the maharāṣis and by them to Kṛṣṇa: XIV, 11, 298 (Indrasya saha V°eṇa yuddham), 299, 301, 302, 304, 306, 308, 310, 311.—§ 785 (Anugītāp.): XIV, 76, 2195 (°eṇva Çatakratoḥ, sc. yuddham). Vṛtraçatru, Vṛtrahan, Vṛtrahanṭṛ, Vṛtranisūdana = Indra, q.v.

[Vṛtra-vadha(h)] ("the killing of Vṛtra"): § 693b (Mokṣadh.). Bhishma said: In days of yore, Indra, accompanied by the celestial forces, proceeded in his chariot, and beheld As. Vṛtra, stationed before him like a mountain, 500 yojanas in height and 300 in circumference. Indra was struck with palsy in the lower extremities. On the eve of that great battle between D. and As. there arose loud shouts from both sides, etc. Vṛtra felt neither awe nor fear. Then the encounter commenced; the entire welkin was enveloped by the combatants of both sides; all the gods with Brahmán, and R., Si., G., and Aps. on their chariots had assembled in order to see the battle. Vṛtra shot rocks, the gods arrows; Vṛtra employed illusion; Indra was stupefied; Vasishṭha restored him to his senses by the Rathantara, pointing out to him Brahmán, etc. (a). Indra, by yoga, dispelled the illusions of Vṛtra. Bṛhaspati (the son of Angiras) and R. repaired to Çiva, whose energy became a fever and penetrated Vṛtra; Vishṇu entered the thunderbolt of Indra; Bṛhaspati, Vasishṭha, and R. urged Indra to slay Vṛtra, and so did Çiva, saying that Vṛtra was the soul of the universe, capable of going everywhere; for 60,000 years Vṛtra had practised penances in order to obtain strength; Brahmán had given him the boons he had solicited: the greatness of yogins, large powers of illusions, excess of might, etc.; Çiva told Indra to slay him with yoga, and imparted to him his own energy. D. and R. uttered loud cheers, etc. Suddenly all As. were afflicted with the loss of memory; in a trice their powers of illusion also disappeared. R. and D. praised Çakra and Çiva (XII, 282). Description of the symptoms that appeared on the body of Vṛtra when he was overtaken by that fever: His memory issued out of his mouth in form of a dreadful jackal. Inauspicious omens. Indra looked hard at him; Vṛtra yawned and uttered superhuman cries; while Vṛtra was yawning Indra hurled his thunderbolt at him and slew him; [XII, 287, 58 ff. = 10,267 ff.: the thunderbolt cut Vṛtra into two halves; Vṛtra then came to the highest region of Vishṇu, for it was by his devotion to Vishṇu that he had overwhelmed the universe]; then Indra entered heaven with that thunderbolt pervaded by Vishṇu. Then Brahmavadhya (description) issued out of the body of the slain Vṛtra.

A little while after, when Indra was proceeding towards heaven, she seized him and stuck to him. Indra entered the fibres of a lotus stalk and dwelt there for many years. But Brahmavadhya pursued him closely, and deprived him of all his energy. At last he repaired to Brahmán, who made her leave Indra by apportioning one quarter to Agni (whence it should enter him who did not offer oblations of seed, etc. to Agni); one quarter to the trees, herbs, and all kinds of grass (whence it should possess the men who would cut or tear any of them at parvan-days); one quarter to the Apsarases (whence it should possess that man who would cohabit with women during their courses); and one quarter to the waters (whence it should possess that man who would cast into the waters phlegm and urine and excrements). With Brahmán's permission Indra then performed a horse-sacrifice and thereby became cleansed, regained his prosperity, and slew thousands of foes. From the blood of Vṛtra were born the çikhaṇḍāḥ (the crests of cocks (?) or name of a plant, BR.), which, for this reason, must not be eaten by the twice-born classes, etc. Blessing upon the reciter (XII, 283).

Yāja, a Brahmarshi, brother of Upayāja. § 218b (Draupadisambhava): Drapada saw the two brothers of Kaçyapa's race, Y. and Upayāja. He courted Upayāja and asked him to perform a sacrifice, by which he might obtain a son who might play Drona, and promised him an arbuda of kine. But Upayāja refused. Drapada once more began to pay homage to him, and after a year Upayāja said that his elder brother, Y., once had taken up a fruit without inquiring of the purity of the spot, and had, in the house of his preceptor, used to eat the remains of other people's feasts; he would entertain no scruples. Describing the might of Drona ("Drona is also skilled in the Brahmastra, his bow is six aratnis long") Drapada promised Y. to give him eight ayutas (cf. r. 6385: "an arbuda") of kine. Y. consented and prevailed upon Upayāja to assist him. Yakshayuddha(m) ("the combat with the Yakshas"). § 10 (Parvasuṅgr.): I, 2, 322 (i.e. Yakshayuddhaparvan).

[Yakshayuddhaparvan(°va)] ("the combat with the Yakshas", the 38th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Yakshayuddha). § 436. The Pāṇḍavas, etc., returned to the hermitage of Nārāyaṇa. Once Yudhiṣṭhira said to them: "We have passed these four years in the woods; it has been appointed by Arjuna, that after the fifth year he will come to the mountain Çveta." They then set out with the brahmins and the Rākshasas, and protected by Lomaça, sometimes going on foot, sometimes carried by the Rākshasas, towards the north, beholding on the way the mountains Mainaka, Gandhamādana, and Çveta, and on the seventeenth day they reached the slopes of Himavat, not far from Gandhamādana, and were received by R.-r. Vṛshaparvan in his hermitage, where they passed seven nights. On the eighth day they entrusted their remaining robes, their sacrificial vessels, ornaments, and jewels to Vṛshaparvan, and, following his instructions, set out for the north, on foot, with Dhaumya, Kṛṣṇā, and Lomaça. On the fourth day they reached Çveta, and entered Gandhamādana (b) with Draupadī and the brahmins, and saw the great Gangā (c). Thereafter, they went to the hermitage of Ārṣṭishēṇa (III, 158). Ārṣṭishēṇa received the four Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa and Dhaumya, and said that during the parvan days rahis living upon water and air and moving through the sky come to this mountain, sounds of kettledrums, etc., being heard on the summits, and that they should not attempt to proceed further, but wait for Arjuna there, as they could not go beyond Kailāsa (d) (III, 159).—§ 437. They passed the fifth year in the hermitage of Ārṣṭishēṇa, eating flesh of deer killed with unpoisoned shafts, listening to the stories told by Lomaça. Ghaṭotkaca had departed, promising to be present when occasion arose. Munis and Cāraṇas visited them. One day Suparṇa carried off a mighty Nāga from the lake, while the mountain trembled, etc., and the wind, raised by Suparṇa's wings, brought celestial flowers of five colours before the Pāṇḍavas towards the river Açvarathā. Kṛṣṇā expressed to Bhīma the wish of seeing the top of the mountain when he had driven away the Rākshasas. Bhīma set out with bow, sword, and mace, and having ascended the summit, thereby gladdening Kinnaras, Nāgas, Munis, Gandharvas, and Rākshasas, he blew his shell. Yakshas and Rākshasas (Krodhavaçāh, v. 11757) assailed him with maces, clubs, etc., but were killed or defeated, and the surviving fled towards the south, forsaking their weapons. The Rākshasa Manimat, the friend of Kubera, in vain attempted to recall them, and with clubs, javelins, etc., he rushed at Bhīma and pierced his right arm with an iron spear with a golden haft, but at last was killed by Bhīma with his mace. The surviving Rākshasas went towards the east (III, 160).

—§ 438. Hearing various sounds and not seeing Bhīma, the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇā, and Dhaumya and the brahmins were filled with anxiety, and, entrusting Draupadī to the charge of Ārṣṭishēṇa, they ascended the summit of the mountain and embraced Bhīma, who was censured and again warned by Yudhiṣṭhira. Kubera, on hearing about the matter from the Rākshasas, in anger let yoke his carriage, and, eulogized by the gods and Gandharvas, and surrounded by 1,000 Yakshas, he set out through the firmament to Gandhamādana, where he seated himself on his seat Pushpaka (b), surrounded by Yakshas, Rākshasas, Gandharvas, and Apsarasas, with his noose and sword and bow, and asked Yudhiṣṭhira not to be angry with Bhīma as Bhīma had only been the instrument of destiny, and said to Bhīma that he did not mind his act of rashness as he had thereby been delivered from the curse of Agastya (c) (III, 161). Kubera then gave Yudhiṣṭhira some wise counsel, referring to the Kṛta-yuga (d); he said, that Yudhiṣṭhira ought to check the rashness of Bhīmasena; they should return to the hermitage of the R.-r. Ārṣṭishēṇa and reside there during the first dark fortnight; the inhabitants of Alakā with Gandharvas, and Yakshas with Kinnaras, etc., should, at the command of Kubera, protect them, and his servants procure for them meat and drink; he praised Arjuna (e). Arjuna would soon join them. Then Kubera went to the mountain Asta, followed by thousands of Yakshas and Rākshasas in vehicles drawn by horses flying in the air. The dead bodies of the Rākshasas were, at the command of Kubera, removed. The Pāṇḍavas dwelt several nights there, being honoured by the Rākshasas (III, 162).—§ 439. At sunrise, Dhaumya and Ārṣṭishēṇa came to them, and Dhaumya, seizing Yudhiṣṭhira's hands, pointed out, towards the east, the Mandara mountain, the east being the region of Indra and Vaiçravaṇa, as the South is that of Yama with his abode Samyamana, and the Asta mountain, where the sun sets in the west, that of Varuṇa, together with the ocean; in the north Meru, with the dwelling of Brahmān, where Prajāpati creates all creatures, and the seven mind-born sons of Brahmān (of whom Dakṣa was the seventh), and where the seven Devarāhis (i.e. Saptarāshayaḥ), with Vasiṣṭha at their head, rise and set; next, to the east of Meru, the abode of Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu, that cannot be seen by gods or Dānavas, and where even Brahmarāhis have no access, not to speak of Maharāhis, but only Yatis; thence, they do not return to this world; Viṣṇu alone shines there. Description of the revolving around Meru of the sun, moon, and stars ("having coursed round Meru, the moon again repairs to Mandara", v. ii, 873) (III, 163).—§ 440. The Pāṇḍavas dwelt there for a month, visited by Gandharvas and Maharāhis. A night and a day became to them like a year, for since the departure of Arjuna, they had not felt joy. After having dwelt for five years in the abode of Indra and obtained all celestial weapons from him, Āgneya, Varuṇa, Saumya, Vāyavya, Vaiṣṇava, Aindra, Paśupati, Brāhmya, Pāramoṣṭhya, and those of Īrajāpati, Yama, Dhātṛ, Savitr, Tvashṭṛ, and Vaiśravaṇa. Arjuna took leave of Indra and came to Gandhamādana (III, 164).

Yānasandhi ("negotiation for peace by embassy" ?). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 331 (parā, i.e. Yānasandhiparvan).

[Yānasandhiparvan(°va)] ("section relating to the Yānasandhi", q.v.), the 60th of the minor parvas of Mbhr. § 561. After the night had passed away, all the princes and chiefs, Bhishma, etc. (a) entered the court-hall (description) to hear the message of Saṅjaya (adorned with ear-rings), who had come back from the Pāṇḍavas by the aid of Saindhava steeds. Saṅjaya related the salutations of the Pāṇḍavas (V, 47). Saṅjaya related that Arjuna (cf. § 556: Saṅjayayānap., V, 23-28) had said, with Yudhishtira's sanction, that Saṅjaya should say to Duryodhana and Karna, threatening them with Bhīmasena, etc. (β), that if the *Dhrtaraṣṭra*s desired war, then all the aims of the Pāṇḍavas were accomplished, as Duryodhana should lie down on the bare earth, deprived of life, etc. Arjuna (b) trusted himself and Kṛṣṇa (c); he said that Duryodhana often thought of imprisoning Kṛṣṇa, and sought to create a sudden disunion between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. "There are with us many aged brahmanas, versed in various sciences . . . who are prophesying the great destruction of the Kurus and the Śrījayas, and the ultimate victory of the Pāṇḍavas . . . thy bow Gaṇḍīra yawns without being handled, etc.; on the top of my flagstaff are heard terrific voices ('when shall thy car be yoked, O Kiṛiṣṇin ?'); innumerable jackals howl at night, and Rākṣasas frequently alight from the sky . . . I will use the Śikhaṇākarna, Paçupala, and Brahma weapons, and all those that Çakra gave me." [This speech of Arjuna is not found in § 556: Saṅjayayānap.] (V, 48). Bhishma said to Duryodhana that Nara and Nārāyaṇa (Nara-Nārāyaṇau) (d) were Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa: it was with their aid that Çakra vanquished the Daiṭyas and Dānavas; Nara slew hundreds and thousands of Paulomas and Kālakañjas in battle; Arjuna, with an arrow, severed the head of the Asura Jambha while the latter was about to swallow him; he afflicted Hiraṇyapura on the other side of the ocean, having vanquished in battle 60,000 of Nivātakaracas; and in the same way also Nārāyaṇa has, in this world, destroyed numberless other Daiṭyas and Dānavas. Karna boasted that he would slay all the Pāṇḍavas in battle, but was rebuked by Bhishma, saying that Karna had seen his own brother slain by Arjuna in the city of Virāṭa, and alluding to the contents of the Goharaṇa-, and the Ghoshayātrāparvan. Droṇa also counselled peace, but got no answer from Dhrtaraṣṭra (V, 49). At the request of Dhrtaraṣṭra, Saṅjaya related that the Pañcalas, etc. (γ) looked up to Yudhishtira. As he was questioned about Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna and the Somakas, he first fell down in a swoon. Then, regarding Bhīmasena (c) he mentioned the lac-house, etc. (δ); regarding Arjuna, the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest, etc. (e); then Nakula (f) and Sahadeva (g); Çikhaṇḍin (ç); the five Kekaya princes, etc. (η) (V, 50). Dhrtaraṣṭra was most afraid of Bhīma (who was taller than Arjuna by the span of the thumb), with his mace (full four cubits in length, with six sides), mentioning his killing Jarāsandha (V, 51). Dhrtaraṣṭra was also afraid of Arjuna, who he feared would conquer Karna (being compassionate and heedless), and Droṇa (being aged and having affection for his pupil Arjuna); "thirty-three years have passed since the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest; we have never heard of his being defeated anywhere" [but cf. the reading of B. trayastrīṃṣat samāhūya, i.e. challenging the thirty-three gods] (V, 52). Dhrtaraṣṭra was afraid of the allies of Yudhishtira: the Pañḍavas, Kekayas, etc. (θ) (V, 53). Saṅjaya rebuked Dhrtaraṣṭra for his behaviour towards the Pāṇḍavas; "the Matayas, etc. (i) all decline to pay thee homage now" (V, 54). Duryodhana said, that when the Pāṇḍavas had been exiled, there came to them Kṛṣṇa, etc. (κ), all assembled in a place not far from Indraprastha, and suggested to Yudhishtira that he should take back the kingdom; "the people of the realm were all annoyed with us, and all our friends also were angry with us"; but Bhishma, Kṛṣṇa, and Açvatthāman had despised the foes ("inflamed with anger at the death of his father this Bhishma, in days of old, had conquered all the kings of the earth, in a single chariot"). "Now the Pāṇḍavas are without allies; and all these kings can, for my sake, enter the fire or the sea . . . Having given up all hopes of a town, Yudhishtira craves only five villages . . . There is none on earth equal to me in an encounter with the mace. In battle, I am Saṅkarṣaṇa's equal; I will certainly slay Bhīma, Bhishma, etc. (λ), every one of these is singly capable of slaying the Pāṇḍavas." He alluded to the superhuman circumstances concerning Bhishma, etc. (μ), to the resolution of the Samçaptakas to slay Arjuna or be slain by him; "our chief warriors are Bhishma, etc. (ν); they have seven akṣauhīṇis, we have eleven; Byaspati has said, that an army which is less by one-third ought to be encountered" (V, 55). At the request of Duryodhana, Saṅjaya described the chariots of Arjuna (h), Yudhishtira (i), Bhīmasena (j), Sahadeva (k), Nakula (l); "and excellent steeds, presented by the celestials, carry the sons of Subhadra and Draupadī" (V, 56). At the request of Dhrtaraṣṭra, Saṅjaya mentioned the allies of the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛṣṇa, etc. (ξ), and who had been assigned to each of them as his share: Çikhaṇḍin & Bhishma; Yudhishtira & the Madra king; Bhīmasena & Duryodhana's sons and 100 brothers, the rulers of the east and the south; Arjuna & Karna, Jayadratha, etc.; the five Kekayas & the Kekayas, Malavas, Çalvakas, Trigartas Samçaptakau; Abhimanyu & Duryodhana's sons (?), Duḥçāsana's sons, king Brhadrata; Draupadeyā + Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Droṇa; Cekilana & Somadatta; Sātyaki & Kṛtavarman; Sahadeva & Çakuni; Nakula & Ulaka, Sārasvatā. All the other kings had been distributed in their respective shares. Thus the Pāṇḍava host had been distributed into divisions. Virāṭa with all his Mataya warriors would support Çikhaṇḍin. Dhrtaraṣṭra was exceedingly afraid of Yudhishtira, etc. (o). Duryodhana said that Bhishma, etc. (π) were invincible. Dhrtaraṣṭra maintained that Bhishma did not wish a battle.

Saṅjaya said that Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna was always urging the Pāṇḍavas to fight, and professed that he would alone encounter all the assembled kings: Bhishma, etc. (p), and his words were approved by Yudhisṭhira; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna had told Saṅjaya to say to the Kurus, etc. (e), that they ought not to suffer themselves to be slain by Arjuna, who was protected by the celestials; they should send a good man to Yudhisṭhira and entreat him to accept the kingdom. [This is not found in Saṅjayayānap., § 556] (V, 57). Dhrtarāshṭra mentioned that Yudhisṭhira led the brahmacarya mode of life from his very youth, and saying that he himself, etc. (r) did not applaud war, he urged Duryodhana to desist from hostilities and give back to the Pāṇḍavas their kingdom, saying, that it was Karna, Duhśāna, and Çakuni who led Duryodhana astray. Duryodhana answered that, without depending upon Dhrtarāshṭra, etc. (v), he and Karna and Duhśāna would perform, in honour of Yama, a sacrifice in battle and slay the Pāṇḍavas; he said that he would sacrifice his life rather than surrender to the Pāṇḍavas even that much of land which may be covered by the sharp point of a needle. Dhrtarāshṭra said that he abandoned Duryodhana for ever, and grieved for the kings who would be crushed by Yuyudhāna, etc. (φ) (V, 58). At the request of Dhrtarāshṭra, Saṅjaya related how he had entered the inner apartments (description) in order to inform Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa; he had seen two straight lines on Arjuna's foot-soles. Kṛṣṇa had threatened the Kurus, mentioning that Kṛṣṇa had invoked him with tears, and that D., As., men, Y., G., and N. were incapable of encountering Arjuna in battle, and alluding to his exploits in the city of Virāṭa (v. Goharānap.) (V, 59). Dhrtarāshṭra represented to Duryodhana that Agni would help Arjuna, remembering what was done to him at Khāṇḍava, that Dharma, etc., would help the Pāṇḍavas from parental affection, that Arjuna took up 500 arrows at a time, that Bhishma, etc. (χ) regarded him as invincible, and said he desired peace (V, 60). Duryodhana, inflamed with wrath, said that according to Vyāsa, Nārada, and Paraçu-Rāma, the gods never engaged in work; if Agni, Vāyu, Dharma, Indra, or the Āçvins had ever engaged in work, the Pārthas could never have fallen into distress, and they and the Mārutis would not venture to protect his foes; "charmed by me, Agni will be instantly extinguished . . . , my energy is greater than that of the gods; . . . it is I who set agoing all the affairs of both gods and Asuras . . . ; neither D. nor G., nor As. nor Itā. are capable of saving him who has incurred my displeasure . . . ; thou wilt hear of the defeat of the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ψ); . . . whatever knowledge of weapons there is in Bhishma, etc. (ω), exists in me as well" (V, 61). Karna said to Duryodhana, mentioning the curse of Paraçu-Rāma, when he, by a lie, obtained the Brahma weapon from him, that he would slay the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (aa). Bhishma mentioned the Khāṇḍava forest, and said that the dart which Karna had got from Indra, would be reduced to ashes by Kṛṣṇa with his discus, and that his other shaft (having a head like a serpent), which he respectfully worshipped with flowery garlands, would be destroyed by Arjuna because he was protected by Kṛṣṇa. Karna made the pledge not to fight before Bhishma's fall, and went to his own abode. Bhishma ridiculed Karna's boasting before the kings of Avanti, etc. (ββ) (V, 62). Duryodhana boasted; Vidura praised self-restraint (V, 63). Vidura related that once two birds had flown away with the net in which they were caught, but were again caught when they began to quarrel.

"So it is also with kinsmen. Once we, with some hunters and brahmins conversant with magic and charms, repaired to the northern mountain Gandhamādāna, with excellent medicinal herbs, and inhabited by Si. and G. There was, on a precipice, some honey, Kubera's favourite drink, guarded by poisonous snakes; the brahmins said that a mortal drinking of it would win immortality, a sightless man obtain sight, and an old man would become a youth. The hunters desired to obtain it, and all perished. So it is with Duryodhana. In a single chariot Arjuna conquered the whole earth; Bhishma and Droṇa, etc. were routed by him at the city of Virāṭa. Remember also Drupada and the king of the Matsyas" (V, 64). Dhrtarāshṭra warned Duryodhana against the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (γγ), and recommended him to follow Bhishma, etc. (δδ) as his guides, mentioning the combat at the city of Virāṭa (V, 65). At the request of Dhrtarāshṭra, Saṅjaya related that Arjuna had said that Bhishma, etc. (ee) were all on the eve of death, if they did not give up to Yudhisṭhira his own share of the kingdom (V, 66). As Duryodhana showed little regard for the words of Saṅjaya, and the rest remained silent, the assembled kings rose and retired. Dhrtarāshṭra, who always followed the counsels of his son, began to inquire in secret of Saṅjaya about the resolves of his own party and of the foes. Saṅjaya caused him to let Vidura introduce Vyāsa and Gāndhārī (V, 67). Saṅjaya extolled Kṛṣṇa (m), and mentioned some of those whom he had vanquished (ζζ) (V, 68). Discourse between Dhrtarāshṭra and Saṅjaya on the attributes of Kṛṣṇa. Dhrtarāshṭra told Duryodhana to seek refuge with Kṛṣṇa. Duryodhana refused. Dhrtarāshṭra complained of him to Gāndhārī. Gāndhārī threatened Duryodhana with Bhishmasena. Vyāsa recommended to Dhrtarāshṭra to seek salvation through Kṛṣṇa. Requested by Dhrtarāshṭra, Saṅjaya explained the path of salvation through Kṛṣṇa (V, 69). At the request of Dhrtarāshṭra, Saṅjaya enumerated some names of Kṛṣṇa (V, 70). Dhrtarāshṭra complained that he could not see Kṛṣṇa, whom he extolled under several names (ηη) (V, 71). Yashṭr = Kṛṣṇa (Vishnu): XII, 13143.

[Yavakritopākhyana(m)] ("the episode relating to Yavakṛita"). § 414 (Tīrthay.). The learned Raibhya and the Rshi Bharadvāja were friends. Raibhya had two learned sons, Aradvasu and Paradvasu; Bharadvāja only one son, Yavakṛita. As Yavakṛita saw that Raibhya and his sons were esteemed by the brahmins, while Bharadvāja was slighted, he practised austerities (exposing himself to a blazing fire) in order to acquire Vedic knowledge for himself and his father (cf. v. 10817) instead of acquiring it from a teacher during a long time. Indra was alarmed, and twice he in vain attempted to make Yavakṛita desist from his penances, saying that they never could be successful. As Yavakṛita declared that he would cut off his limbs and sacrifice them in the fire, Indra assumed the guise of an old decrepit brahman, and began to throw up a dam of sand at that spot of the Bhāgīrathī where Yavakṛita used to bathe, and declared that Yavakṛita's intentions were equally impossible. Then Yavakṛita desisted from his plan, and Indra granted him that the Vedas should be revealed to him and his father, and that he should excel other men. Bharadvāja said that Yavakṛita would become proud and uncharitable and thence destruction would soon overtake him (§ 415), and told him some gāthās, narrated by the gods, about Madhavin (q.v.).—§ 416. Bharadvāja made Yavakṛita promise to shun the irritable Raibhya and his sons, and Yavakṛita began to offend other rshis (III, 135). Once, in the month of Mādhava, he came to the hermitage of Raibhya and seduced (?) (cf. sajjayam āsa, var. lect. Nil., instead of majjayam āsa) the wife of Paradvasu. When Raibhya came home and saw what had happened, he offered in the fire two matted locks of his hair, whence sprang out a woman resembling his daughter-in-law, who robbed Yavakṛita of his water-pot, and a Rākshasa, who flew at him with his uplifted spear, as he had been deprived of his water-pot and rendered unclean (ucchiṣṭa). Yavakṛita fled to a tank and then to all the rivers, and, finding them all devoid of water, he attempted to enter into the agnihotra room of his father, but was stopped at the door by a blind cādra warder, and killed by the rakshas. The Rakshas, with the permission of Raibhya, began to live with the female (III, 136). When Bharadvāja returned home, the sacrificial fires, which used to welcome him every day, did not come forward to welcome him. Having heard from the cādra what had happened, he cursed Raibhya, saying that he should be killed by his eldest son. He cremated Yavakṛita, and then himself entered the fire (III, 137). At that time king Brhaddymna, the yājña of Raibhya, employed Aradvasu and Paradvasu at a sacrifice, while Raibhya stayed at home with the wife of Paradvasu. One day Paradvasu, returning home to see his wife, met in the darkness his father in the wood wrapped in the skin of a black antelope, and, mistaking him for a deer, killed him. Then, after having performed the funeral rites of his father, he prevailed upon Ardvāsu to observe the vow prescribed in the case of killing a brahman, while he himself conducted the sacrifice alone. When Ardvāsu came back, having observed the vow, Parāvasu caused him to be driven away from the sacrifice as a slayer of a brahman. The brahmarshi Ardvāsu went to the wood, and, applying to the Sun, he practised austerities and mastered the Rakasyaveda of the Sun. The Sun appeared to him in his embodied form, and said the gods were pleased by him. They elected Ardvāsu and rejected Parāvasu. The gods Agni, etc., granted him the boon that Raibhya, Bharadvāja, and Yavakṛita revived, that Parāvasu was absolved from his sin, that Raibhya did not recollect his having been slain, and that the Saura Veda should attain celebrity (pratishthā). The gods explained to Yavakṛita that Raibhya had been able to kill him because he had acquired his knowledge with great exertion and in the course of a long time, while Yavakṛita had learnt the Vedas without exertion and without a guru. Then Indra and the gods returned to heaven (III, 138).

Sambhavadhap.): Having installed Pāru on the throne, Y. entered the wood to lead the life of a hermit for 1,000 years and then ascended to Svarga (I, 86), where he was revered by the gods, the Sādhyas, the Maruta, and the Vasus, wandering about in Devataloka and Brahmaloka. One day Indra asked him what he had said to Paru when he bestowed the kingdom upon him. Y. answered that he had said: "The whole country between the Gangā and the Yamunā is thine, this is the central region of the earth, the outlying regions will be the dominions of thy brothers. Those without anger are ever superior to those under its sway, etc." (I, 87). As Y. said that he did not know his equal in ascetic austerities among men, gods, Gandharvas, and maharishis, Indra declared that, owing to this haughtiness, he should fall from heaven, yet he should fall among the virtuous. When falling, he was beheld by the rājarsihī Aśhaka (I, 88), of whom he was the maternal grandfather; Y. spoke disapprovingly of haughtiness, etc., and told that, leaving earth, he had obtained many high regions for 1,000 years, then he had dwelt in the town of Indra (having 1,000 gates and extending 1,000 yojanas all around) for 1,000 years, then for 1,000 years in the world of Prajāpati, then in the abode of Devadeva (i.e. Vishnu); he had also dwelt in Nandana for 100 ayutas of years, assuming any form at will, sporting with the Apsarases; then there had come a messenger of the gods with a grim visage, who thrice had shouted to him "fall"; then he had fallen from Nandana, hearing, while falling, the compassionate exclamations of the gods, who had directed him to fall to the sacrificial place of Aśhaka and his companions (I, 89). Y. continued: Those who speak of their own merits after having dwelt for 60,000 or 80,000 years in heaven, are doomed to suffer the pains of the hell called bhauma (i.e. existence on the earth), and are attacked by certain Rākshasas with sharp teeth. Y. then taught the lore of transmigration and emancipation (I, 90). Y. explained the duties of grhasthas, bhikshus, brahmacārinis, and vānaprasthas, and the different kinds of munis and mauna (vows of silence) (I, 91). Y. then said: "I now shall fall into the bhauma hell, the Lokapas of Brahmā hasten me thither." The kings Aśhaka, Pratardana (I, 92), Vasumanas, Aushadācvi, and Çibi Auçñara, offered him their "lokas" and volunteered to go to hell (naraka) in his place; Y. did not accept the offer. Then appeared five golden chariots, in which they all five ascended to heaven, Çibi leaving the others behind him. Y. told them that he was their maternal grandfather, that he had given the whole earth with her horses, etc., to brahmins, and that the earth and the firmament and fire existed owing to his truth. * (I, 93): I, 86, 3535 (Nahusho rāja), 3541, 3543, 3544 (Nahushah); 87, 3553, (3555); 88, †3564, (3565), (†3567), †3568, †3569; 89, (†3577), †3577 (Nahushanya putraḥ Paroḥ pitā), (†3580), †3589, (†3591), †3598; 90, (†3601), (†3603), (†3606), (†3609), (†3613), (†3617), (†3621); 91, (†3628), (3635), (3637); 92, (3646), (†3651), (†3654), (†3656), (†3659), (†3661), †3663; 93, (†3665), (†3667), (†3670), (†3672), (3674), (3676), (3678), (3681), (†3684), †3684 (Nahushanya putraḥ Paroḥ pitā).—§ 156 (Pūruṣamṣ.): I, 95, ††3760 (son of Nahusha, husband of Devayāni and Çarmishthā, enumeration of his sons).—§ 267 (Yamasābhāv.): II, 8, 319 (in the palace of Yama).—§ 273 (Rājasūyārambhap.): II, 14, 570 (as tv eva Bhogāndam vistaro gunato mahān).—§ 296 (Dyūtatap.): II, 56, 1930 (yathā).—§ 320 (Saubhavadhap.): III, 21, 841 (prapatataḥ Y°oḥ kshīnapuṇyasya scargād eva).—§ 345 (Nalopākhyānap.): III, 57, 2235 (tye adpy aśramadhena Y°ir eva Nahushah).—§ 376 (Tirthayātrāp.): III, 85, 8268 (yathā).—§ 377 (Dhaumyatīrthak.): III, 89, 8363 (Viçvāmītranadi . . . yasya tīre satam madhye Y°ir Nahu-

POSTSCRIPTUM.

The author of this work, the late Professor S. Sørensen (*23rd November, 1849—†8th December, 1902), was an eminent Sanskrit scholar. While an undergraduate he strenuously applied himself to the study of Classical Philology and Sanskrit at the University of Copenhagen, where he became a pupil of J. N. Madvig and N. L. Westergaard. In 1883 he took the degree of doctor of philosophy with a most valuable and comprehensive dissertation on the "Mahābhārata and its Place in Indian Literature", in which he made an attempt at determining the oldest elements of that great epic. Unfortunately he only obtained the professorship of Indian Philology in the Copenhagen University at an advanced age. In 1902, a short time before his premature death, he succeeded V. Fausbøll in the only chair of Indian Philology in the Copenhagen University.

He began to collect the materials for the present work as long ago as about the year 1880, and continued it under great difficulties and self-sacrifice. In the year 1902 the work was so far advanced that he could commence printing, but only the first four sheets (pages 1-32) had been put into type before his death. The manuscript of the preface, the concordance, and pages 33-153 had been put into final shape by him, whilst the materials for the rest of the work were left unrevised. In these circumstances it was resolved that the work should be continued, and the revision and final preparation of the manuscript was, under the superintendence of the undersigned D. Andersen, committed to the undersigned E. Olesen, who had already assisted the author for two years.

During the further revision, however, it was found that the collection of the material had partly been provisional, and some time had to be spent in completing it. Furthermore, it was considered advisable to add a selection of the various readings from the Bombay Edition. This accounts for the rather numerous Additions and Corrections. Several other difficulties arose during the preparation and printing of the work, especially in the time of the Great War, but they were all overcome and now we are amply rewarded for all our efforts in being able to place the great work of our compatriot before the learned world.

Our sincere thanks are due to Professor Sten Konow and to Sir George A. Grierson, who both of them have read all the proofs and given us many valuable hints. Also the printers deserve our best thanks for their accurate and skilful work. No less thanks are due to the publishers, who have been ready to carry out this far from lucrative undertaking.

Finally, we acknowledge with the deepest gratitude the subventions which have been granted by The Danish Government, The Carlsberg Fund, The Rask-Oersted Fund, and the India Office, which gracefully granted its support to the undertaking in subscribing to a number of copies.
